THE

TEXTILE MANUFACTURES

AND THE

COSTUMES OF THE PEOPLE OF INDIA

Prepared under the Authority of the Secretary of State for India in Council.

By J. FORBES WATSON, Reporter on the Products of India.

Imperial quarto, morocco back, cloth, with numerous coloured Photographs. £3. 6s.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

The Times.—"On no point, perhaps, in regard to India, has greater ignorance prevailed in England than in respect to the clothing of her vast population. Late as it is, and for the first time within the last hundred years of our Indian domination, the work just completed by Dr. Forbes Watson supplies this great and almost unaccountable want of information, and supplies it, too, in a most complete and intelligible manner. It would be impossible to follow Dr. Watson's work in detail; but, whether to the manufacturer or to the general reader, the interest throughout will continue unbroken. His book is written in a clear and thoroughly intelligible style throughout; it is handsomely got up, and embellished by numerous coloured photographs, from which the various styles of costume and portions of clothing, male and female, will be more readily understood than from mere descriptions."

The Morning Post.—"The conception of this splendid work reflects the highest credit upon the wisdom of the department to which we are indebted for its publication; and the manner in which it has been executed by its author. No one can fully appreciate the value of this work without seeing it, because neither analysis nor extracts can give any idea of the immense mass of minute facts which it contains, and the admirable manner in which they are classified and made subservient to the practical requirements of the manufacturer and the merchant, and the cravings of the student of ornamental art. The illustrations are as magnificent as they are appropriate. In fact, as mere productions of beauty and taste, they give the work the air of a book of art luxury, and we have no doubt that from this feature it will find many admirers and purchasers beyond the ranks of trade and commerce."

The Athenæum.—"We may safely say that a more important work on the manufactures of India has never been given to the public, than the Industrial Museum, and this Commentary by Dr. Forbes Watson. Advantages are sometimes slow to follow, even when the channel for them has been skilfully made and clearly marked out, but we certainly do anticipate very great results from this work, and that before long its author will be acknowledged to deserve a place amongst the real benefactors of India."

The Edinburgh Review.—"It is a matter of national importance to study and ascertain what the traditions of India in respect to dress really are. This task has been most ably performed by Dr. Forbes Watson in the volume before us. We call attention to the work and to the subject, not as a matter of mere curiosity, but as an inquiry of direct interest to the manufacturing industry of Europe. Dr. Watson has evidently brought his personal Indian experience to bear upon a mass of materials which, in less skilled hands, would most likely have proved wearisome and unintelligible. As he has arranged his details, they are as entertaining to the general reader as they are full of information and instruction to the manufacturer."

The Art Journal.—"The work, indeed, is as well fitted, as far as embellishment is concerned, for the drawing-room table as it is for the study; and its contents will be found far more interesting to the general reader than its mere designation would lead to a supposition that it might be. The motive and purpose of its publication is highly creditable to the present Home Government of India."

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.

Dyspepsia, Jaundice.—These complaints are the result of a disordered liver, which secretes bile in quality or quantity incapable of digesting food. Digestion requires a free flow of healthy bile, to insure which Holloway's Pills and Ointment have long been famous for eclipsing every other medicine. Food, irregularity of living, climates, and other causes are constantly throwing the liver into disorder, but that important organ can, under all circumstances, soon be regulated and healthily adjusted by Holloway's Pills and Ointment, which act directly upon its vital secretion. The Ointment rubbed upon the skin penetrates immediately to the liver, whose blood and nerves it rectifies. One trial is all that is needed; a cure will soon follow.

NOTICE.

As the Furlough Pay of Officers on leave in this country from Regiments in India will, after the 1st of April, 1870, be issued at the India Office instead of through the Regimental Agents as heretofore, and as this step is preparatory to the issue of Officers' Pay in other cases without the necessary intervention of a Regimental Agent, with the view of excluding from the Army Estimates in future the charge for agency; we, the undersigned Regimental Agents, hereby give notice, that we are prepared to act as the Private Army Agents of Officers, and to draw their Full Pay, Furlough Pay, Half-pay, Retired Pay, or Pension, free of charge.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, Feb. 4; Agra and Madras, Feb. 2; Calcutta, Feb. 1.

THE topic of the week in India was the fresh inroad of Loshai savages into the tea-gardens of Cachar, and across the frontier of Chittagong and Tipperah. The worst of this storm seems to have visited Cachar, where several factories have been attacked, villages burnt, and lives lost. In the attack on a tea-factory at Alexandrapore a Mr. Winchester was slain. A subsequent onslaught on another tea-garden at Monier-Khall, only twenty miles from Silchar, was successfully repulsed with the help of a party of police who held a stockade in that neighbourhood. Five of the Monier-Khall garrison were wounded, while their assailants lost many times that number. The latter however in their retreat fell upon the rear of a small sepoy detachment hastening to relieve the defenders of Monier-Khall, killed six men and carried off the baggage. Some of these wretches are also said to have killed another Englishman with his wife, carrying off their children. Nothing certain seems when the mail left to have been heard of Mr. Edgar who, only a few days before the outbreak, had been reporting the complete success of his negotiations with the Loshai chief Sukpilal, leader of a similar raid two years ago. A later telegram however assured us a week ago of his safety some time after the events above reported. The Howlong tribe, who are chiefly concerned in the present raids, have no connection except one of common descent with the friendly tribe to whom Sukpilal belongs so that there is no reason to suspect the latter of treachery. The immediate cause of these raids is involved in mystery; but Captain Lewin's description of the Loshai tribes, in his excellent monogram on the Hill Tribes of Eastern Bengal,* suggests causes that lie on the surface. These Loshai savages are always fighting among themselves, and their intervals of peace are relieved by raids into our outlying districts in quest of slaves, plunder, and human heads. They do not seem to have any cause of quarrel with the adjacent tea-planters. Detachments of native infantry have been sent after the marauders, but the task of catching them in the wild jungles of that frontier will not be very easy. The Cachar planters and the Calcutta press complain loudly of the defenceless state of the rich districts exposed to these border raids, and of the utter disregard paid by the Bengal Government to their repeated warnings and entreaties. The planters however seem to have stood manfully to their posts, and it is to be hoped that the measures henceforth to be taken for their protection will satisfy all reasonable demands.

* "Wild Races of South-Eastern India," by Captain T. H. Lewin. Allen and Co. 1870.

AFTER holding his first levée at Lahore on January 23, when he presented a robe of honour to Tara Sing, Mr. Forsyth's companion on his late journey to Yarkand, and received, like his predecessors, a "stout walking-stick" from an old Sikh "Rai," the new Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab set off on the 26th with his party towards Mithankote, where about the 28th he expected to meet Sir W. Merewether. The main object of the meeting was to confer upon the best means of keeping the border tribes of Sindh and lower Punjab in order. To this end may be referred the selection of the Shum plain for a new outpost, as mentioned in our last issue. This spot by the way lies west of Dera Ghazi Khan—not Dera Ismail Khan, and commands the passes towards Kandahar. According to some maps it appears to lie beyond the British frontier, but this is evidently a mistake.

MR. FITZJAMES STEPHEN carried through Council on the 27th January two more of his measures for consolidating the law of India. One referred to the law on coroners, the other to that on prisoners. Mr. Stephen by the way defended the Council with some success from the charge of hasty and overmuch legislation. The law, he said, was like a railway, which from time to time needed repairing; and the Council had only been trying to get rid of confusions in practice, and reduce the bulk of written law.

LORD NAPIER, we observe, has declined to remit the sentence passed on Ensign Gilbert, in view of the need for making examples during the prevalence of insubordinate conduct in the Indian Army. The Ensign, therefore, must take his just punishment for a grave military offence; but what will be done to Colonel Kennedy, who, as the court-martial itself admitted in its plea for mercy to Mr. Gilbert, "provoked" that officer to his undoing? Will the Field Marshal Commanding in Chief do his duty as sternly as Lord Napier has done his?

THE news of a great Panthay victory over the Chinese in Yunan sounds very like the final overthrow of Chinese rule in that rich but long-troubled province. The Panthays or Mahommedans of Yunan are friendly to the development of trade with Burmah by the old Bhamo route, and, peace once established, would doubtless make good the pledges they gave to Major Sladen. But the true hindrance to the revival of trade by Bhamo seems still to rest with the King of Burmah, who has a natural if short-sighted preference for squeezing all the profit he can out of traders passing through his dominions. It appears that some large caravans from the Shan States have lately opened up a brisk trade at Mandalay, the Burman capital, instead of taking the road through Bhamo. Their choice is said to have been influenced by the King himself, who can levy full dues on all goods sold at Mandalay, whereas at Bhamo he can only get one per cent. on account of his treaty with the Indian Government.

WE are glad to hear that Colonel Maxwell, R.A., has received instructions to cast experimental bronze guns of the new 9-pounder pattern at the foundry of Cossipore. There is no reason why the failures lately made at Woolwich in the casting of bronze guns should be repeated at Cossipore, in a country where the art of mixing the component metals has never been quite lost. We trust that Colonel Maxwell's firm belief in his power to cast guns as good as those which were first tried under his directions at Woolwich with such marked success, will be amply verified, and that India may thus be enabled to utilise her stores of old bronze, by means of her own foundries, instead of paying for the manufacture of expensive steel guns in this country.

A TELEGRAM from Calcutta, dated Feb. 27 (5.17 P.M.), says:—The Maharajah of Puttiala was invested to-day at the Government House with the Grand Cross of the Order of the Star of India. Prince Gholam Mohamed and Sir William Grey were also invested as Knights Commanders. The ceremony was very brilliant and impressive. Lord Napier of Magdala has arrived at Cachar. Means are being taken to cut off the raiders. About 2,000 troops and police are now assembled in the district.

MR. T. L. PATTERSON, in a letter to our scientific contemporary, Nature, proposes suction as the best way of curing snakebites. Remembering how Queen Eleanor of England saved her husband's life by sucking the poison out a wound inflicted by a poisoned arrow, we should think the process worth a more careful trial than it has yet received in a country like India, where some forty thousand people are reckoned to die yearly from the bite of cobras and other poisonous reptiles. In some parts of South America, according to Mr. Patterson, a person bitten by a snake is sure to die "in thirty minutes to one hour," unless his wound is immediately sucked. There the process of sucking is done by the mouth alone, which, by way of precaution, is filled with olive oil before applying it to the wound. The result appears to be, that the bitten person seldom if ever dies, while he who sucks the wound receives no harm whatever from the poison, even if he swallows it; the fact being that the same poison which kills a man if absorbed into the veins, will have no effect when taken into the stomach. Hitherto we have heard much in India and Australia of injecting ammonia into the wound, but nothing about drawing the poison out of the wound. Mr. Patterson's idea of applying the latter process is by means of "an instrument made for the purpose, and similar in principle to a boy's sucker." Some way above the wound a ligature should be fastened, and the wound itself might be enlarged, so as to ensure a free outflow of the poisoned blood. In default of an instrument the human mouth could be used with perfect safety.

IF anything Indian could interest members of the Commons' House and readers of the daily newspapers, Mr. Grant Duff's exposition of Indian Finance last Friday ought to have worked that miracle. It is always pleasant to hear the present Under-Secretary for India discourse on Indian topics, except perhaps when he has to resist some unpalatable demand for money from the Indian Treasury. His financial statements are always clear and lightly handled, and on this occasion the effect was all the more pleasing because he had no detailed accounts to go through for the coming and little more than half the accounts for the passing year. On the year 1869-70 however he was able to announce a real surplus of £120,000, which contrasted nicely both with the deficits of former years and that which had seemed so imminent in the autumn of 1869. For the year 1870-71 he expected a surplus of nearly a million, reckoned on the returns made up for eight months out of the twelve. This welcome prospect, which may even yet fall short of the reality, is mainly due to the unexpected rise in the price of opium, which has given the revenue the added difference between 975 and 1,113 rupees on each chest sold. Why opium should have thus risen in spite of all seeming likelihoods, Mr. Duff could not explain, and wisely refrained from trying to explain. On the strength of this surplus the Indian Government can afford to be generous, and so we are not surprised to hear from the Under-Secretary that the present income-tax of 7½d. in the pound, to which the Home Government "consented with very great reluctance," will almost "certainly be diminished." The wisest plan would be to throw it out altogether as a political danger and a fiscal failure in India; but to that stage of enlightenment the Indian Government has hardly yet attained. Mr. Duff did not say how much the tax would be diminished, but from India we are glad to hear that the limit of taxable property will be placed at a thousand instead of five hundred rupees a-year, and the proportion taxed be reduced to one or one-and-a-half per cent.—say about threepence in the pound.

ANOTHER feature in the budget for the coming year is the new system of decentralised finance with which our readers are already acquainted. In going over this part of his subject, Mr. Duff relieved his load of figures by illustrations at once apt and interesting. Of the 4¾ millions to be henceforth divided among the local governments, Bengal, "which equalled in extent the Austrian Empire," receives £1,200,000; the Punjab, "which was about the size of Italy," receives £520,000. To Madras, which "was rather larger than Great Britain and Ireland," will be allotted £939,000; to Burmah, which "was three times as large as Scotland," £275,000; to Oudh, "which was about as large as Holland and Belgium, and very thickly peopled," £200,000; and so on. To the unmathematical hearer or reader this mode of measurement suggests ideas far less vague than if Mr. Grant Duff had revelled in square miles or acres. In spite of his promising budget for the current year, he foresaw "the usual difficulty in making both ends meet" for the coming year; firstly, because we are governing 200 millions of people on revenue raised from only 150 millions, and secondly because we govern "after a civilised and scientific fashion" with a taxation better suited to an uncivilised and unscientific rule. In default of "heroic remedies for chronic impecuniosity" we must fall back on such expedients as income-taxes, retrenchment, enhanced customs duties, and enhanced salt duties. In the way of retrenchment there is something, but not much to do. Take the army for instance, which at its present strength gives one soldier to every thousand inhabitants, or only 200,000 soldiers in all. How can reduction go further here? And the British soldier in India must always be an expensive article. As for the salt duties, they are already too high in some districts, while export duties cannot bear raising much, and are contrary to English ideas and interests. On this point Mr. Duff betrayed rather too much deference for the cant which would sacrifice some safe and easy sources of revenue to an ignorant construction of free-trade principles. In respect of income-tax however he had the good sense to acknowledge the mischief caused in India by the invincibly corrupt and extortionate tendencies of native tax-gatherers and their helpmates. The uncertainty of the opium-revenue was another source of discouragement on which he could not help touching.

The fabled wealth of India must have vanished from the minds of any hearer who might still have believed in it, on learning from Mr. Duff that the estimated income of that country is only about 300 millions sterling a-year, or two pounds a head, as compared with the £30 a head or £800,000,000 at which the British Islands have been valued. His statement that the land of India is on the whole less fertile than that of England will have shocked not a few who have been wont to dream about the peculiar richness of Indian fields, and the double harvests with which bountiful nature rewards the ryot whose plough has merely scratched the soil. Mr. Duff grew plaintive over the financial prospects of India, in spite of his efforts to cheer up himself and his audience, and was evidently much impressed with the hard task of avoiding at once the Scylla of spending too little on public works and the Charybdis of running into debt. It must therefore have been to him an immense relief to turn away from finance to the general question of India's progress during the last two years of perfect peace and freedom from disasters like the Orissa famine or the cyclones and floods of former years. His picture of administrative progress was crowned by a just and pertinent reference to the artistic excellence of Indian workmen, as evinced in every Exhibition, and even more perhaps in the rooms of the India Museum. It is strange, we agree with him, that art-work so beautiful should command so small a sale in this country. And yet it is certain that everything Indian shown for sale in the late Islington Exhibition was greedily bought up.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN FINANCE.

It is fortunate for India that gentlemen like Mr. Gilpin are not likely to have a supreme voice for some years to come in the management of Indian affairs. In the discussion provoked by Mr. Gladstone's project of a joint Committee of Lords and Commons on Indian finance, Mr. Gilpin protested loudly against permitting official "experts" to be "judges of a system in the administration of which they had been concerned." The subject of inquiry being the financial conduct of the Indian Government, and the Committee being destined to discuss everything connected with Indian taxation, "including the extent and pressure of the income-tax," it was his opinion that such topics should be handled, not by those who had spent the best part of their lives in India or the India-office, but by "gentlemen acquainted with the principles of sound finance." This preference of "experts" to statesmen who may be presumed to know something of the country they have governed, affords a happy illustration of the old Greek cobbler's theory that there was "nothing like leather" for building walls. Imagine a committee made up of skilled financiers only, deciding the question whether an income-tax was good for India, and what proportion of the people could afford to pay a tax of sixpence or sevenpence in the pound! What short work would be made of some of India's most productive taxes by "gentlemen acquainted with the principles of finance" and nothing more! Would such a body tolerate the salt-tax for example, or approve of low export duties on articles largely raised for the English market? Your trained financier, accustomed only to English ideas and usages, and wholly ignorant of things Indian, would propose such a remodelling of India's fiscal system as would aggravate tenfold the unpleasant symptoms which our efforts to make both ends meet in that country have already brought into undesired prominence.

A due admixture of financial capacity with special experience in Indian administration is however an essential condition for the forming of a Committee competent to deal thoroughly with the whole subject of Indian finance. Mr. Gladstone's idea of a Committee selected from both Houses had much to recommend it from this point of view. The aid of such statesmen as Lords Derby and Lawrence and the Marquis of Salisbury would have been of very great service in the discussion of many large questions connected with the financial history of India during the last twelve years. But the strong feeling in the Lower House against any encroachment of the Lords on their own domain compelled the Premier to withdraw that part of his motion. The Committee therefore, as now arranged, will consist of members of the Commons, a small proportion of whom will be office-holders. In the preponderance of independent members we may find the assurance, if not of special knowledge, at any rate of fair deliberation. The task before them, if it covers much less ground than some enthusiasts both here and in India were fondly anticipating, will not be light. Mr. Fowler may look in vain for some reference to our dealings with those Hill Tribes whom Mr. Hunter was not the first to discover, and some high-flying Bengallies may sigh over their blighted hopes of an early end to the despotism which has given them a free Press, but still refuses them a voice in the government of their own country. The Committee however will have quite enough to do, if it enters thoroughly into the whole question of Indian finance, and we can but hope that the issue of its labours will justify Mr. Grant Duff's prediction as to the clearing up of many misunderstandings, and the general satisfaction of all concerned in India's welfare. Among things that call for special consideration are the Indian income-tax and the apparent deficits of so many past years. On both these points there are certainly grave misunderstandings which a Committee of unbiassed judges should have no difficulty in clearing up. Is an income-tax of even one per cent. allowable in a country where the levying of it opens the door to untold extortions? Is there anything like a good reason for paying the cost of the new barracks out of yearly income? On these and other like points we await the Committee's answer.

COLONEL HAMLEY ON THE LAWS OF WAR.

Colonel Hamley's last letter to the Times on the German mode of conducting the late war shows no improvement on the temper of his first. The spirit of the partisan breathes in every line of it. He has a keen eye for German wrong-doing, real or imaginary; but not a word to say against those misdeeds on the other side which provoked the cruelties he is so ready to condemn. According to his reading of late events one would imagine that the French, like Brutus, "did never wrong but with just cause," and that all they have suffered at German hands has been the mere offspring of unprovoked German brutality. Colonel Hamley inveighs to weariness against the system of fines, requisitions, and forced labour, which marked the progress of the invaders in the latter stages of the war; but he cannot spare breath to regret the ill-timed resort of the invaded to a mode of resistance which imparted a needless savagery to a conflict theretofore waged with comparative mildness, and which went far to justify the worst reprisals inflicted by the opposite side. All his arguments and ingenuity are employed in showing the wickedness and impolicy of carrying on war at the expense of the invaded country; not a word is said of the fearful provocations which changed the character of the campaign after the surrender of Sedan, and forced those who had so far carried out their promise of fighting against French soldiers to fight in self-defence against French citizens also.

It is amazing indeed to note how utterly Colonel Hamley ignores the cardinal point of the whole question. Looking over the whole course of the campaign, an unbiassed reasoner would at once have asked himself why its later stages differed in some important respects so markedly from the earlier. No fact has been more widely admitted than the disciplined self-control with which the Germans carried on the war in an enemy's country down to the beginning of September. They had come to fight with French soldiers, not with the French people; and many of those who now join in denouncing them were once loud in praise of their strict adherence to the rules of civilised warfare. Whence therefore the subsequent change for the worse in their proceedings? To such a question there is but one reasonable answer: The French authorities proclaimed war to the death against the invader. Open towns were stirred up to a needless and vain resistance; villagers were exhorted to lie out in ambush for stray Germans, to withhold all supplies from the hated foreigner, and to circumvent him by every art of deliberate treachery and organised assassination. The people, in short, were everywhere bidden to treat the invaders like mere beasts of prey; to put them, in the words of Dr. Arnold, "out of the pale of civilised hostility." This war of brigands once begun by the French, no matter under what sanctions of a well-meaning but shortsighted patriotism, what else could the Germans do but that which, in their own defence and the interests of civilised warfare, they afterwards did, with a thoroughness that has not yet been found to defeat its purpose? It is easy to say that they could have afforded to treat lawless assassins like recognised soldiers; but we are very sure that no army placed in their position would have dared to offer so manifest a premium on that very kind of warfare which modern civilisation and mere humanity have an equal interest in putting down. Colonel Hamley objects to precedent, but most people will perhaps agree with us that both Dr. Arnold and the Duke of Wellington are as well worth hearing on this subject as a writer who can seriously propose that "civilians armed in defence of their country should be treated as soldiers." What Dr. Arnold thought of irregular partisan warfare, our readers have already seen.* The pith however of his masterly argument—that those who put an invading army out of the pale of civilised hostility, "must be patient if the enemy in return burn their village and hang them up as brigands," may be compared with Wellington's own practice in the early part of 1814. Provoked by the excesses of our Spanish allies, the Basques of Southern France had taken up arms, and carried on a partisan warfare "until Lord Wellington"—says Napier—"incensed by their activity, issued a proclamation calling upon them to take arms openly and join Soult or stay peaceably at home, declaring that he would otherwise burn their villages and hang all the inhabitants." And, if the peasants of Bidarray and the Val de Baygorry had not very soon changed their tactics, Wellington would certainly have been as good as his word. He would have treated them in short as sternly as the French had treated the Spanish guerillas, and as the Germans have just been treating the French freeshooters.

Very strange is the contrast between Colonel Hamley's tenderness for the suffering angels who proclaimed a war of brigands, and his rage against the cruel monsters who accepted the challenge and repaid with usury the loss inflicted on themselves by the new weapons they had thus to face. We for our part have no wish to reverse the process, and depict the Germans as suffering angels. They may, for aught we can certify, have been guilty of excesses outweighing the provocation received, but in a struggle for life with a furious lunatic one cannot measure with perfect nicety the lengths of violence to which the assailed may fairly go. Nor do we care much to question the abstract right of an invaded people to fight tooth and nail, if so it pleases, in defence of hearth and home. Only, if it does so, it must take the consequences. The assailed party cannot be expected to look at the matter from the assailant's point of view. Partisan warfare makes civilised warfare impossible. Atrocities on one side lead to atrocities on the other, and the strongest eventually win. Colonel Hamley indeed would seem in a hazy sort of way to imply that the Germans themselves provoked the brigandage they punished with so heavy a hand; but the implication runs counter both to common sense and notorious facts. It is absurd to charge them with seeking to prolong the struggle by needless outrages, and all the evidence shows that so long as the French fought fairly, their opponents also adhered to all the rules of civilised war. But the laws of the duel once broken, it became to the Germans a matter of life and death to keep the new kind of warfare from spreading. Colonel Hamley may charge them with "indulging the spirit of a base revenge without the wretched warrant of its provocation"; but his readers may be excused for hearing in this sort of language the cry of angry disappointment at undesired successes. Is it or is it not true that the German severities date as a system from after the irregular warfare sanctioned by the Republic of last September? Is it or is it not true that but for those severities the war would have been indefinitely prolonged, and the strain upon German resources stretched in all likelihood to the breaking point? The one question has been answered already by an universal Yes. A like answer to the other might have been gathered not only from the measures taken by the Germans to meet the new danger, but also from the exulting tones of those who rashly but not without reason counted on saving France through her armed peasantry. Remember also how much from the German point of view was staked on finishing the struggle before any third Power might be tempted to interfere. What then becomes of their "base and unprovoked revenge," and how was it easy to be magnanimous under provocations so heavy and circumstances so full of danger?

But how about the right of an invaded people to convert a war of soldiers into a war of savages—for that is the simple meaning of partisan warfare as it has lately been carried on? It is easy to talk of patriotic uprisings, and to say that "peasants and citizens count for something in the scale when weighed against armies and against kings;" but, after all, the right to make outlaws of regular soldiers fighting under recognised rules rests on much the same moral footing as the right of aggrieved Irishmen to shoot their landlords, or of oppressed Republicans to assassinate a political foe. They who admire the exploits of patriotic freeshooters ought in consistency to sympathise with the murderers of General Prim and the assassins who plotted against Louis Napoleon. Partisan warfare is little better than assassination on a large scale, and the very retaliation it is sure to provoke condemns it as a weapon of defence in a civilised country. It has been agreed that political assassinations are blunders as well as crimes. In an age when men are striving to humanise war as far as possible, to devise fresh rules for its better conduct and new limits to its dreadful appetite, irregular warfare, at all times a blunder, becomes in fact a crime against humanity. It is an evil means to an end however good, a relapse from civilisation into utter barbarism. If England were invaded to-morrow by regular armies, would Colonel Hamley exhort his civilian countrymen to take up arms on their own account and go out stalking the foreign foe, instead of either remaining peacably at home, or entering the ranks of our militia and volunteers? And yet his proposal that "civilians armed in defence of their country should be treated as soldiers" looks very like an attempt to justify so pernicious a practice, in the teeth of all precedent and of every principle dear to the friends of civilised progress. Zeal for humanity takes a curious form when it seeks to perpetuate a kind of warfare which aggravates beyond measure the darkest horrors of a process always horrible enough, reviving the most obsolete forms of unmilitary license and unmanly deviltry, and entailing a choice aftercrop of disgrace and ruin on the very people it was meant to benefit. Better to put up with German requisitions than to open such a Pandora's box of evil issues in the mere hope of salving a wound received in fair fight.

GERMAN POLICY AND THE OPIUM TRADE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

Sir,—Whether the acquirement of a French settlement in India is to be one of the fruits of the late German victories is a question which, in all probability, has been decided ere this. It is not one of vital moment to us; but since a correspondent, whose letter was published in Allen's Indian Mail of the 7th inst., has called the immediate attention of diplomatists to the rumours that prevailed with regard to Pondicherry, I take this opportunity of considering the points specially alluded to in Colonel Haly's communication.

Colonel Haly asks, "Will the strictly conscientious German mind lend itself to the iniquitous British monopoly of the vile opium growing trade ?" and secondly, " Will the great German mind be satisfied with circumscribed plots hemmed in by British territory ? "

There can be no doubt as to the reply that should be made to Col. Haly's inquiry about the opium trade. The slightest observation of the conscientious methods adopted in Germany of raising public income there will not fail to convince one that the German mind would regard with the utmost aversion the iniquitous contraband practice, created and encouraged by us, for supplying our Indian treasuries, and for the acquisition of princely fortunes by a dozen of English and Scotch merchants steeped in that scandalous trade. It cannot be stigmatised in less severe terms. For, according to Commissioner Lin's calculation, the annual import of 12,000 chests of our drug, smuggled or forced into China, kills, per chest, twenty-five men, between the ages of seventeen and thirty-six. According to the testimony of the British Commissioner there, the duration of human life does not exceed ten years from the first pipe of this poisonous narcotic ; and according to that of our missionaries there, their labours are doomed to failure on the threshold, because it is constantly objected to them by heads of families that they cannot respect a religion which countenances the wholesale smuggling or forcing into their country a drug with which we are deliberately, and solely for our pecuniary profit, demoralising and destroying hundreds and thousands of human beings, the subjects of a friendly ally.

But with reference to Colonel Haly's second inquiry, whether the great German mind will be satisfied with circumscribed plots in India, hemmed in by British territory, I feel assured that the German people are fully alive to the facts that the discipline, endurance, valour, and intelligence of its army are, in a great measure, owing to the circumstance that Germany has no Colonies ; and that the standard of discipline, strategy, and elan, adequate to ensure victory, create generals, and win ribbons, in Algeria and Cochin China, is incomparably inferior to that which the exigencies of military service demand and call forth in the fields of Europe. It may be presumed, therefore, that Moltke, King William, and Bismarck, being wise men, will not risk impairing in any respect a military machine, which the skill and labour of forty years have brought to perfection, by diverting any portion of it to relaxation in the land of the beetle-nut and banana.—Your obedient servant,

A Diplomatist.

THE LOSHAI RAID.

The Englishman holds that whatever may be the exact circumstances under which the raid has taken place, it must become a matter for grave consideration whether the Government of Bengal can persevere in its present conciliatory policy. The military expedition despatched against the Looshais in 1868-69 proved, owing to the character of the country, a complete failure ; and the Government of Bengal would have sent a fresh expedition, more carefully organised, last year, had not its views on the subject been overruled by the Supreme Government. But it is evident that, whatever may be the physical character of our frontier, we are bound, in justice, not only to our own subjects, but to ourselves, to protect it ; and if this cannot be done by conciliatory measures it must be done by force of arms. If the former have failed, as seems probable, for, at the best, our security has not been much increased by winning over Sookpilal, the Government has to choose between retributive and purely preventive measures. It must either accept the burden of keeping up permanently a sufficient frontier force to render incursions into British territory impossible, or it must assume the offensive on a scale, and with precautions, proportioned to the difficulties to be overcome. The great commercial importance of the interests now established in the province of Cachar is alone sufficient to do away with all doubt and hesitation on this point. It is anything but creditable to the Government that the Hylakandy Valley should have been left exposed to an attack of this kind at a time when the disposition of the Looshais was a matter of so much doubt. The sufferers and those interested in Cachar will not readily forget the discourteous manner in which the representations of the Landholders and Commercial Association on the subject of the defencelessstate of the province were received by the Government of Bengal in December 1869. The owners of tea gardens, instead of meeting the support and sympathy to which they were entitled, were then taunted with tempting attack by giving way to needless panic, and recommended to set an example of " courage and self-reliance " to the people under them. While the reports of the local officials represented the tribes as quiet, and Sookpilal as well disposed, no rumours that reached the planters could be worth listening to, and past experience was not to be referred to in the face of the new policy which was to convert the Looshais into faithful tributaries. This time the planters have exhibited a " self-reliance " which must be most satisfactory to the Bengal Government. They have listened to no rumours ; shown no " panic," and been murdered at their posts. The authorities, however, appear to be doing their best to make amends, as far as possible, for the negligence that has been displayed. The District Superintendent of Police started on the 23rd with sixty of his men for the spot ; and fifty sepoys had been despatched to act under the orders of the sub-divisional officer at Hylakandy. The guards at Monierkhall and Loharbund, where there are both troops and police, have been raised to thirty-five men each ; and troops are also moving up from Sylhet and Cachar with large bodies of police.

The Friend of India observes that Mr. Edgar appears to have arrived in the Looshai country in time to see the frail tenure of the policy which he was sent out to establish among the lawless tribes very rudely struck down. The telegrams are conflicting, as they naturally must be when everything depends on hearsay, and when no one can answer for more than he can see. All that is certain is the fact of a dangerous raid. It is not yet known what tribes are concerned in the raid. There are three ways by which the Looshai can enter Cachar from the South :—By the South-East, through the Monairkhall Garden, by the direct South route through Dwarbund, and South-West by Pollicherra. At each of these points there was a police force of from twenty to thirty men, which had frequently proved too weak for anything like successful resistance. About two years ago a somewhat serious attack was made on one of the gardens, and many coolies were killed. In this case the attack is perhaps more serious, though that it is more than a raid of a few hundreds of men is not supposed. It becomes an important question, however, whether Government is justified in leaving the tea gardens at the mercy of these savage tribes. Of course, as is usual in such cases, people are ready to say on behalf of the Bengal Government,—" They told you ; they warned you." Stuff and nonsense for the main part, but almost certain to come whenever the Imperial Government and the Government of Bengal are jointly concerned. We are sorry to see in a letter published by Mr. Macfarlane in the daily papers the following passage, with the italics as we quote them :—" A coincidence was that just after we had driven the savages out of the garden an express came in from Edgar in the Looshai country, mentioning his complete success in treaty making, and begging for a dâk to carry his letters into the station." The irony is undoubted. This to our view is very unreasonable. Why did not the planters complain earlier if they foresaw what has taken place ? No policy can be secure against a wild raid of this kind. The position of the planters, we grant, is an exceedingly painful one, and they have a right to the guard that they ask for. But it is no use depreciating the efforts of Mr. Edgar to introduce a better policy than that of mere return raids. The fact is that the Government of India has been trying a policy of conciliation on sound principles, and the present hitch in that policy need not we trust be taken as failure. That the guards should be strengthened there cannot be a doubt, but the Government will, we hope, only see an additional reason for pressing its general policy of conciliation. What is needed, is a sharp return raid, swift punishment, some wholesome destruction of property—it cannot be helped—and then a return to the policy which carried Mr. Edgar from Silchar.

THE UNCOVENANTED.

The Indian Daily News can well understand the uneasy feeling that pervades the ranks of the Uncovenanted, consequent on the reported intention of Government to put Junior Civilians into all their higher appointments. And it is difficult to understand how, after Government has held out such flattering hopes to a class of superior servants, like the higher Uncovenanted, whose ability and meritorious services have over and over again been acknowledged, it intends thus ungraciously to reward them. Of course the alleged reason for the change is, as stated above, to make room for Junior Civil servants. But how comes it that this should be necessary when, as generally understood, the supply of Civilians to this country is regulated by the demand ? It is, we know, a cause of grievance with the latter service, that while many of its fat appointments have been pruned away under financial pressure, those which remain are not reserved to their use with that jealous regard to their rights which the covenant implies, and which Covenanted men may reasonably demand. The number of Covenanted appointments, now filled by military men, is very large, and this more especially in the Non-Regulation Provinces. This, if we mistake not, is a special cause of grievance with the North-West Civilians, who, only recently, pointed out that the proportion of appointments, fixed by the resolution of Lord Dalhousie to be reserved for Covenanted Civilians in these provinces, has never been maintained. The result would seem to be that to provide for the surplus candidates who have emanated from Dean's Yard, an inroad must be made on the Uncovenanted camp. This, as we have had occasion to state before, is, on the face of it, unjust to a service, many of whose men have made their mark, and who have a right to expect more considerate treatment. How the injustice, however, is to be combated is a question for the service to consider. But something in the shape of an appeal, or a protest on their part, should be placed on record, even though it be ineffectual. Looking to the quarter from whence the recent change in policy towards the Uncovenanted has presumably emanated, there is not much in the way of favourable result to be expected from a memorial to the Home Secretary. Still we would counsel the service to be up and doing.

"PANIC SUNDAY" IN 1857.

The Times of India observes that everyone knows the story of Sir Walter Raleigh, who, whilst writing his "History of the World," threw down his pen in despair, when he found that he could not get at the truth of an affray beneath his chamber windows. Contemporary history ought to be more easily written than remote history, because there are so many "living witnesses." But living witnesses do not always agree among themselves. And there is certainly a great advantage on the side of the historian of remote ages, that no one can contradict him on the score of his own personal recollections. We wonder whether we have really a correct account of the death of Tarquin, or the story of Virginius, or the battle of Lake Regillus, in any of the histories before us. Perhaps, we have—perhaps, we have not. But any how, no one can start up and say to the historian, "I know you are wrong, for I saw it." We have written this, with reference to a letter written by the author of the "History of the Sepoy War" to a Calcutta paper, and republished in Allen's Indian Mail. Early in December we reproduced a letter written by Dr. Mouat, of the Bengal Medical Establishment, in reference to the alleged Calcutta panics of 1857, together with the comments of the Indian Daily News, charging Mr. Kaye with mis-statements and mis-representations. Mr. Kaye replied that he derived his information mainly from Dr. Mouat himself, and from the Calcutta papers of the period. Of the former, we of course know little, or nothing; but it is certainly the fact that the English papers of Bengal put forth statements respecting the panic at the Presidency much stronger than any which the historian has included in his work. That those who resided in Calcutta at the time should wish now altogether to ignore the alarms which were then so notorious, is not strange. But it is as well, while there is the chance, that, in the interests of historical truth, we should ascertain whether statements respecting these alleged alarms are "mis-statements" or "mis-representations." We have heard that when Lord Elgin arrived in Calcutta, he said that Lord Canning was the only man who did not appear to be in a fright—and it is known that Sir William Mansfield, in his somewhat sensational style, said something to the same effect. This generalisation may have been unjust. We have, indeed, no doubt that it was unjust. But that there was a panic, especially on the 14th June, does not appear to be questionable; else why has that particular day ever since gone by the name of "Panic Sunday." It is strange how those reacting processes, which are a law of nature, affect historical inquiry. When Shakspeare wrote that the "whirligig of Time brings in its revenges," he must have referred to this truth among others. Because thirteen years ago the Calcutta panics were overstated, they are now understated—the oscillation of the pendulum being as extreme on the one side as on the other. The truth, probably, will be found midway between the two extremes. To cry out now "no such thing!" after the feat has been admitted for so many years, is not exactly the way to deal with a question of history. But as Mr. Kaye has said, with Charles Surface in the play, "Egad, I'll have it out!" and has called on the public to help him, we suppose that we shall some day know the truth.

Military.—The head-quarters of the Allahabad division will be established at Dinapore from the 1st of February. General Beatson, accompanied by Colonel Fraser and an aide-de-camp, will leave Allahabad on a tour of inspection on Sunday next.—Pioneer.—We understand that there will be a good many changes by the commencement of next hot season in the Military Accounts Department of Bengal. Colonel Mundy, Presidency Paymaster, intends proceeding to England on furlough; Major Harrison, first Pay-examiner, also goes home on furlough; and Colonel Osborn, the second examiner, is expected to take leave. About the same time Colonel Hill, the Military Accountant, may perhaps leave for a few months. Captain Carter, Deputy Paymaster of the Sirhind Circle at Umballah, is, it is reported, about to obtain sick leave to England; and it appears doubtful whether General Broome's state of health will permit his resuming his duties as Controller-General of Military Expenditure on the expiry of his present leave, which extends to 1st May next. Altogether a considerable exodus appears likely within the next three or four months; and there may be a difficulty in filling up the different vacant appointments from the present limited number of assistants in the Pay Department, without bringing in, temporarily, some outsiders.—Indian Daily News, Jan. 28.—The Government of India has decided that regimental medical officers, being staff officers in India, are entitled to the advantages which all other regimental staff officers enjoy, and should therefore be allowed a continuance of their charge pay when transferred from one regiment to another on public grounds.

Bengal.

THE LOOSHAI RAID.

The following telegram from the Commissioner of Dacca has been received by the Secretary to the Government of Bengal:—

Dacca, Jan. 27.—Poyakookee, in Hill Tippera, burnt on the 21st January. Kutlecchura reported on 24th burnt. Bagshawe beat off the Looshais. Alexandrapore burnt about the same time. Sellar missing. Winchester of Bikrampore killed. Villages on Munnipore border cut up about 18th inst. Guards of police and military strengthened at Monierkall, Loherbund and Deederkoosh. Fifty sepoys and sixty police, with Metcalf and Savi, are near Hylakandy. Edgar, with Supeelall, and forty police, are attempting to intercept the Howlongs on their return. He was far south of Julnacherra when reported. The 4th Regiment number about 290 private effective at Dacca, and 276 at Cachar.

Telegrams from Cachar of the 26th January report that "the Assistant Superintendent of Police arrived at Lukinuggur at 3 P.M. on the 24th. Looshais all over the Hills. Second attack on Kutlecherra on morning of 24th. Thirty or forty Looshais charged up to the Bungalow. Bagshawe with ten constables drove them off. Just then Metcalfe (Sub-divisional Officer) arrived with his party and the Assistant Superintendent came up soon after." There were 170 men with Metcalfe on the west of the frontier line, 32 at Loharbund on the south, 32 at Monierkhall on the east, 13 at Deedarkhoosh, 7 at Mynadhur over Bhubun, and 20 at Lukhipore. The latest news from Mr. Edgar was dated the 21st. He was then on friendly terms with Sukpilal.

On the 27th the District Superintendent reports that the Looshais attacked a place ten miles from the station (Silchar?), and killed four persons. He was just starting for the spot with police and troops.

The Government has ordered two more companies of the 44th N.I. from Shillong in addition to the one called for by the local authorities in Sylhet; and has directed the officer commanding at Cachar to send troops at once to support Mr. Edgar and secure his safety. It is believed that the gardens are now strongly protected by police and troops.

Cachar, Jan. 28.—The Manager of Monierkhall left the stockade in a boat last night. Reports that the raiders were repulsed with a loss of about a hundred killed and wounded. Daly is on his way to Monierkhall. Five persons in the stockade wounded. The force at Monierkhall was thirty-five police, and for a time they were surrounded in the stockade. The Hylacandy Valley is now well protected, and fifty sepoys have been recalled thence to go to Loharbund guard. Reinforcements are on their way to Cachar from Shillong.

Mr. McWilliam telegraphs from Cachar on the 28th:—"Monierkhall attacked yesterday by raiders, who have surrounded the outpost (thirty-five strong). Demiakhall, on the Sonai, destroyed, and the village of Nugdigram attacked. Daly (District Superintendent) started for Nugdigram with 30 sepoys of 4th N. I. to assist the Monierkhall guard yesterday evening. Have re-called the 50 sepoys who went to Hylakundy. There are police enough for protection of west. The 50 sepoys are to go to Loharbund. The guard now there will move forward to the point where Daly's Road crosses the Rengtipahar. I have asked for 100 men from Shillong. News from Edgar, dated 21st, received yesterday. Still with Sukpilal."

Still later in the day (28th) Mr. McWilliam reports:—"Daly's rearguard of eight sepoys and a constable was attacked at Nugdigram this morning. Five sepoys were killed. No dâk from Edgar to-day, nor has any message come from Daly, who went on to Monierkhall this morning."

The following, from private sources, gives further details of the Monierkhall affair:—

Silcoorie, Jan. 27.—Monierkhall besieged. Nugdigram cut up at twelve to-day. Durrumkhall in danger.

Jan. 28.—Desperate fight at Monierkhall from six morning till eleven night. Four attacks made and each repulsed. At least one hundred Looshais killed and wounded. Pearce, Shaw, and Eglinton, fought them the whole time with guard in stockade. Guard fought splendidly. Five wounded on our side.

Mr. McWilliam telegraphs on the 29th:—

"No news from Edgar or Daly, but Edgar has about nine days' provisions, and could come down the river in four or five days on rafts. Have sent provisions to Daly via Deedarkhoosh with a guard. I expect scouts from Nugdigram hourly. Bowalia reports heavy firing from Monierkhall direction yesterday at two."

Later in the day he reports:—

"Letter from Edgar, dated 22nd, Changsil. He has heard that Poees or Shindoos have burned Lenkom's village, killing many, and taking prisoners. Lenkom is Vonolel's son. Of course he has not heard of our raids. No news from Daly."

From the telegrams we publish this morning, it seems probable that a fresh attack was made on Monierkhall on the 28th ultimo; and if so, the obstinate determination shown by the raiders, coupled with the extensive character of the simultaneous movement which is evidently going on, suggests a doubt whether other tribes may not have been mistaken for Looshais. The information received by Mr. Edgar regarding the burning of a Looshai village on the 22nd by Poces or Shindoos, if true, would somewhat strengthen this suspicion. A combined hostile movement on the part of the latter tribe would be a much more formidable affair than we have had to deal with on our North-Eastern frontier for many years; for the Shindoos are a very powerful tribe, and it is believed that extensive sales of fire-arms to them by inhabitants of British territory have been going on for some time.

A Shindoo incursion would also be a much more difficult thing to punish, as they reside in foreign territory. This tribe were believed to have been the perpetrators of a raid on the villagers on the Coladyne, in the district of Chittagong, some two years ago, against a repetition of which the hill-men had resolved to defend themselves, and been furnished by the Government with five thousand rounds of ball cartridge for that purpose. It is evidently very doubtful at present who our enemy is.—Englishman, Feb. 1.

Miscellaneous.

Peshawur.—Small-pox has begun to rage in unhappy Peshawur; children are the chief sufferers.

The Talookdars' Association.—The Vice-Presidentship of the Oude Talookdars' Association, lately held by Sir Maun Singh, C.S.I., has been conferred on Nawab Ameer Hussein Khan.

Arrival of the Chief Justice of Madras.—Amongst the passengers by the Punjab was Sir Colley Scotland, the Chief Justice of Madras, who has come on a visit to Calcutta for the benefit of his health.

The Peshawur Division.—According to the Pioneer, Colonel F. R. Pollock, C.S.I., Commissioner of the Peshawur Division, intended to proceed home within a few weeks, when Mr. Macnabb will act for him.

Another Illustrious Visitor to England.—According to the Mofussilite, Sir Salar Jung is about to proceed to England, and personally thank her Majesty for the decoration he has lately received.

Icicles in Sinde.—The cold has been so intense at the Mulleer lately that icicles were found on the works connected with the viaduct yesterday morning. We should have been inclined to doubt this phenomenon, for such it may be called, were it not communicated to us by a reliable eye-witness.—Sindian, Jan. 25.

A Wonderful Tale.—A writer in the Akmulul-Akbar (a native paper published at Moradabad), according to the Jubbulpore Chronicle, states that on the 15th December, about 8 P. M., one Luchmi Persad, the Ameen for Partitions, was washing his face and hands at a tank, when all at once the figure of a man's head appeared in the water, and the Lalla was dragged by the legs into the middle. He came to the surface twice or thrice, and then sank to rise no more. It is added that a great crowd collected round the tank, and a great noise ensued, but no one had the courage to make an effort to save the drowning man.

Allahabad.—Two matrimonial cases came on in the Allahabad High Court on Jan. 27. In Kelly v. Kelly and Britts, Mr. Justice Turner suggested that as the respondent and co-respondent could not be found, it would be best to withdraw the suit, with leave to renew it. The petitioner's counsel said he would adopt that course. In Hopkins v. Hopkins, Mr. Jardine, on behalf of Mrs. Hopkins, brought to the notice of the Court the fact that Captain Hopkins had not paid the alimony which had been agreed upon, and that his wife was thus reduced to great distress, and the Court ordered that notice should issue to him to show cause why he should not be arrested.

The late Dr. Ogilvie.—The Indian Reformer announces the death, on the 25th of January, of the Rev. Dr. J. Ogilvie, the well-known, the learned, and the philanthropic Principal of the General Assembly's Institution of Calcutta. This melancholy event, which took place at Penang, whither the rev. gentleman had gone to recruit his health, will no doubt be received with intense pain and grief by a large section of our community. Dr. Ogilvie's name was identical with the history of his mission. By his death the native community have lost a sincere and an honest friend, the missionary body a zealous and well-tried servant, and the University a valuable and learned coadjutor.

Snakes.—According to Nature, the question of killing deadly snakes at Government expense in India is again under discussion. The Government is losing its subjects at the rate of above a hundred a-day, or 40,000 a-year, by snake bites, but it fears losing rupees in the crippled state of its treasury. The last enforcement of the law was under Mr. Commissioner Plowden, many years ago, in the Bancorah district, one of the smallest portions of the Burdwan division. Deadly snakes were brought in at the rate of some 1,200 a-day, and although the scale was only from threepence to sixpence a-piece, in about a couple of months £10,000 was drawn out of the treasury, and the Government ordered the snake crusade to be stopped.

Sir W. Grey on the New Financial Arrangements.—The Englishman, replying to the Indian Daily News, says it has every reason to believe that no minute by Sir William Grey, disapproving the late Financial Resolution, has been written. "The Government of Bengal has, so far as we can learn, recorded no objection to the Resolution of the 14th December, and is heartily working out its share of the plan."

Map of Independent Tartary.—The Pioneer says:—"A very fine map has recently been brought out by the Grand Trigonometrical Survey Office at Dehra. This map, which is in four sheets, comprehends that territory known in ordinary maps as 'Independent Tartary,' together with a portion of what has hitherto been known as 'Chinese Tartary,' from 58° to 86° E. long., and from 28° to 47° N. lat. It is drawn to a scale of 30 miles=1 inch, and is founded upon all the more recent itineraries and surveys, including a map published at St. Petersburg in 1868. Here will be found the most authentic information about those lofty, vast, and thinly-inhabited regions through which some people are childish enough to imagine a Russian army marching to the invasion of India over the Roof of the World."

The Brahmo Somaj.—On Sunday week the forty-first anniversary of the Brahmo Somaj was celebrated. Some thousands of Brahmos paraded the streets in Calcutta, with banners in their hands, and singing hymns. On Monday they congregated in large numbers in their mundir or assembly room to hear a sermon from one of their celebrated ministers. The Indian Mirror says that the religious enthusiasm of the members was at its height when the service concluded, whether from the peculiar solemnity of the sermon or the hymns nobody could tell, but it was "manifest that a powerful stream of spiritual sympathy pervaded the whole place; that the spirit of God was near every worshipper's heart" was evident from the extreme fervour and enthusiasm of the people, and the Mirror hopes that "many a sinful heart felt that he was saved."—Friend of India, Feb. 1.

The Edwardes Memorial at Peshawur.—The successful competitor for the premium of Rs. 1,000, offered for the best design for a memorial fountain to the late Sir Herbert Edwardes at Peshawur, is Mr. DeRebeck, principal of the School of Art and Design at Jeypore. The committee to select the design consisted of Major-General Abbott, Colonel R. Maclagan, R.E., and Mr. Lepel Griffin. About ten designs were submitted. Indian Public Opinion describes the selected design as a cupola, supported on arches filled with tracery, having a white marble basin, with a jet of water within, sheltered from the dust and heat; the outer building is an octagon about fifty feet each way. The design was selected chiefly from its appropriateness. It will harmonise with native buildings in a native market-place which no Gothic design could possibly do; and the arrangement of a covered fountain is suited to the climate of India.

Five-Rupee Notes.—The British Indian Association at Calcutta has presented a memorial to the Viceroy on the subject of the five-rupee notes about to be issued. The reason why paper money has not obtained a larger circulation, is, the memorialists allege, not the denomination of the note, but the difficulty experienced in cashing it, and therefore they argue, if five-rupee notes, which are certain to be used in paying wages, are put into circulation, measures should be taken to facilitate their conversion into rupees. The change lately published in the Gazette is, the memorialists allow, very good as far as it goes, but then they say it does not go far enough. Another complaint brought against the intended issue is that the payment of the discount asked for cashing the notes would inflict a serious loss upon the mass of the population, who are generally speaking so poor they cannot afford to waste a pice of their small incomes. Besides this, the memorial urges that "the ignorance of the bulk of the people, their inability to discover lost or stolen notes, their liability to lose notes, and their desire to possess silver, alike suggest that a five-rupee note, as proposed, should not be forced upon them."

The Financial Department.—"The post of Deputy Secretary in the Financial Department may, it is not improbable, be abolished in the course of a few months," says the Calcutta Examiner. "The post is a comparatively new creation. When the late Financial Secretary, Mr. E. Lushington, was about to retire, something like an assurance of succeeding him was intimated to Mr. Batten, who accordingly resigned an appointment of higher salary in the North-West, and came to Calcutta as Deputy Secretary of Finance. Mr. Chapman was, however, appointed to succeed Mr. Lushington, and Mr. Batten had to remain a loser of salary. Mr. Batten is now in England, where he has obtained a prolongation of his short leave, but before leaving India he had been appointed Deputy Commissioner of Salt and Customs, and it is understood that he will succeed to Mr. A. O. Hume's substantive appointment of Customs Commissioner, when that gentleman becomes Secretary in the Department of Revenue, Commerce, and Agriculture. The Deputy Secretaryship it was thought would be abolished when Mr. Batten left the Financial Department, but it was not. The rumour now is that it will be abolished if Mr. Chapman finds he can do without a deputy; and we may be sure that gentleman's finding in the matter will be a conscientious one. Leaving a post of the kind unfilled is, however, sometimes preferable to expressly abolishing it."

CIVIL.—The Pioneer hears that the Nagpore, Nerbudda, and Jubulpore Commissionerships will very soon be vacant—the last by the retirement of Colonel Spence, and the two others by the departure on furlough of Messrs. Bernard and Low. Mr. F. MacNachten, we learn, is permitted to resign the Civil Service. We are informed that the services of Lieutenants L. J. Grey and W. A. Lawrence, of the Bengal Staff Corps, are placed at the disposal of the Government of Bengal. Lieutenant T. Deane is to be adjutant of the Governor-General's body-guard, vice Lieutenant Lawrence. Mr. F. Peacock will succeed to the vacancy in the Secretariat of the Board of Revenue, caused by the departure of Mr. Ross Mangles to Mysore, and Mr. W. M. Souttar wil act for Mr. Peacock as Registrar of the High Court. Mr. Geoghagan is likely to officiate in Mr. Mangle's place in the Board of Revenue from the end of March.—Examiner, Jan. 30.

THE COAL IN THE CHANDA DISTRICT.—The Central India Times says :—"All the world has heard of the Chanda coal-field, its contiguity to the Nagpore branch of the G.I.P. Railway making it of special importance to the future of railway construction in Central India. It was to be linked on to the railway system by a tram or light railway, and so on. But, before deciding finally on what was to be done, the authorities seem to have been boring to determine the extreme margin of the field westward—i.e., the nearest point where a workable pit could be sunk nearest to the railway. We have from time to time chronicled a find here and there in this direction during the last year or so, and now we are told that Mr. Dunlop, the assistant to the Cotton Commissioner, has come upon an exposed seam as near as thirty miles from the civil station of Wurdah, by which the railway runs. The indications are in favour of the presumption that a workable deposit may be found at a convenient depth all over the Wurdah Valley, and as near the railway line as it may be desirable to have a colliery at work. Common sense would therefore point to our shifting the field of boring operations from the Chanda district, sixty-nine miles or so away, where it has been sufficiently demonstrated already that the mineral underlies the superficial strata over a wide area, to the vicinity of the railway line itself, where, notwithstanding the overlying trap flow, and the prognostications therefrom of our geologists, we now find it cropping up to the surface in company with its usual rock strata. Mr. Bernard, the Commissioner of the Division, who has charge of these operations, and has energetically pushed on the works from the first, will no doubt see to this ; and we have no fear that Mr. Fryar, the mining engineer, will allow any theory of our Geological Department to stand in his way."

Madras.

CIVIL.—It is now said there is no truth in the statement that Mr. C. A. Roberts is to be appointed Postmaster-general of Madras. Mr. Roberts goes home on furlough in March next.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE.—The inauguration of the new rooms of the Madras Chamber of Commerce was celebrated on Saturday afternoon, Jan. 28, by a tiffin, to which the Hon. P. Macfadyen the present chairman, invited all members of the Chamber and European mercantile assistants.—Bombay Gazette.

THE DEFENCES OF MADRAS.—The Madras Standard believes that it is under the consideration of Government to erect three batteries in Madras—one at the Marine villa, another near Roypooram, and a third at Abercrombie's, in connection with the armaments of the Presidency towns in India. The object of these three batteries is to keep off the enemy's fire from the fort in case of an attack by sea, and thereby save the public buildings in the fort.

WESTERN CHINA.—News has been received that the Panthays in Western China have attacked and occupied the headquarters of the Chinese General, committing great slaughter. If this be true, Momein is probably now in the possession of the victors, and the Bhamo route practically ensured. All that remains is, as the Political Agent says, to take some goods to that town, and, if possible, bring back a Panthay caravan.

THE TRADE OF MANDALAY.—The Pioneer states that several large caravans had arrived at Mandalay from the Shan States, and an active trade with the south had in consequence been reopened. Some of this might indeed have gone to Bhamo, but the King took some trouble to divert the merchants to Mandalay, as in the latter market he gets full duties on everything sold, whereas at Bhamo he gets only one per cent.

COCHIN HARBOUR.—According to the Madras Standard, Mr. Robertson, the engineer who has been deputed by the Secretary of State to examine and report on the various harbours in India, arrived from Calcutta in the P. and O. steamer on Saturday, the 21st, and was to proceed to Cochin without delay, and inspect and report on the harbour at the port. When the Earl of Mayo arrived in Madras about two years ago, on his way to Calcutta, the Madras Chamber of Commerce asked for a harbour engineer, and this is the result.

THE LATE MAJOR CARR.—Major M. W. Carr, one of those who went down in the General Outram, is referred to as follows by the Madras Mail :—"His attainments as a linguist were very extraordinary ; he was thoroughly master of Telugu and Hindustani, and had besides a very considerable acquaintance with other Oriental languages. His literary work, too, was most careful and exact, as his 'Telugu Proverbs' prove. This will always be a sufficient monument of his attainments, though we fear we shall never see the important works he had in the press. It is indeed a sad loss to the public and to his friends, both in India and Europe. His scientific friends will probably give a notice worthy of him in the 'Journal Asiatique' and 'Royal Asiatic Society's Journal.'" Major Carr was a bachelor.

MILITARY.—We learn from the Madras Mail that there is a defalcation of something like eighteen thousand rupees in the account of H.M.'s 45th Regiment. A sum of money was drawn from the Bank of Madras for the payment of the regiment for December, just before the Christmas vacation. On a recent examination of the accounts, the same amount was found to be wanting. The matter will, it is said, be brought before Government.—Major-General Richard Shubrick, commanding the Hyderabad Subsidiary Force, is about to take leave to Europe. He will, it is conjectured, be succeeded temporarily by Major-General George de Sausmarez, commanding the Pegu Division, in which case Brigadier-General George Shakespear, R.A., commanding the Centre District, will obtain the Pegu command; and either Brigadier Selby or Brigadier Macintire, C.B., will be transferred from a second class brigadiership to the temporary command of the Madras first class brigade.

An Officer in Trouble.—Lieutenant F. Beresford, of the 1st battery 5th brigade R.A., has arrived at Madras from Rangoon in the steamer Himalaya, under escort of one of the officers of H.M.'s 76th Foot, and was immediately, on landing, sent under a fresh escort to Saint Thomas' Mount, where he was to remain under arrest till brought before a court of inquiry. We presume it to be of this case that the Madras Mail writes as follows:—"We all know the cunning devices by which the indebted heroes of the 'Harry Lorrequer' class of novels escaped civil arrest when about to proceed on foreign service. There is no longer any need for an officer who, on the eve of embarkation, is dunned by unfortunate creditors and vigilant sheriff's satellites, either to be hoisted on board in a cask labelled 'prime navy beef,' or to be concealed in the hold; he has merely to get himself placed in military arrest, not a very difficult task, or very dangerous risk, and he walks on board arm-in-arm with the brother officer who is told off to escort him, and laughing at the discomfited bailiff. A case of this sort occurred at Rangoon very lately, and the officer, who has been living a jolly and fast life at the expense of the merchants and tradesmen at Rangoon, has, by the simple process of adding a military offence to a long list of commercial peccadilloes, been able to walk unmolested on board the Madras steamer at the expiration of the foreign service of his corps. We believe that it is to the Deputy Judge Advocate of the Pegu Division that the army owe this privilege, and we hope that the officers who profit by this boon to the army will be more grateful towards the official who has obtained it for them than they are to the creditors who gratuitously purvey to their little necessities. We doubt not that a fitting testimonial will mark their gratitude."

Bushire.—We (Bombay Gazette) have the pleasure of acknowledging the receipt of Rs. 400, the proceeds of performances at the New Gaiety, Bushire, by the Kwang Tung Troupe, "in aid of the French and German Sick and Wounded." As requested, we have divided the amount between the Bombay representatives of the two nations, whose children now see a prospect of peace.

Bombay.

Sport.—We have a morsel for shikarries this week. A deal has been heard of tigers and panthers about Tannah and Toongar lately, and we have to record the demise of one of these creatures. Its death was brought about by Messrs. Welti, Taaks, and Krell, of Bombay. They had been out for a day, and on Sunday morning last got scent of a tigress. They followed it up and got the brute at bay in the jungle some ten miles from Tannah, in the direction of Toongar. There, on foot, they shot it—dead. We have not heard its exact dimensions, but it is a pretty well grown tigress. The carcase was brought in the train to Boree Bunder Station and carried off in triumph on a tent pole.—Bombay Gazette.

Trial for Murder.—A European lad named Joseph Murray was tried for murder on Friday, Feb. 3, at the Bombay Criminal Sessions. Murray and a boy had gone out to shoot; on the way the former pulled up some sugarcane from a field and gave it to his comrade. The owner of the field, a Hindoo, took it from him, and then there was a quarrel, in which the gun exploded. The Hindoo was shot in the side, and he stated Murray fired deliberately at him. The man died a fortnight after. Two counsel (Messrs. Ferguson and Farran) appeared for the prosecution; Mr. Inverarity, a junior barrister, defended the prisoner, and made his maiden speech to the jury on the occasion. The defence was that the gun went off accidentally, and the jury acquitted the prisoner on all counts.

Rotatory Shot and Shell.—In consequence of a correspondence which has recently been carried on with the Horse Guards, the Inspector-General of Ordnance at Shoeburyness has asked the Bombay Government to cause a series of experiments to be made with the rotatory shot and shell invented by Mr. John Cullen, of the Sinde Railway Company. With this object in view, we understand Mr. Cullen leaves for the Presidency by this morning's steamer, whence he will proceed to the head-quarters of the artillery at Kirkee, where a thorough practical test of the utility of his inventions will be made under the supervision of competent officers. The Commandant of Artillery has been requested to render the ingenious inventor every facility, and to report the result of this official test to Army Head-quarters. We may state that models of these destructive missiles have already been forwarded to the authorities at home, accompanied with full explanations, together with a copy of the result of the trial that was made here some time ago.—Sindian, Jan. 25.

Dharwar Cotton Report.—Dharwar, Jan. 31.—Our latest news of the Liverpool cotton market is to 26th instant, quoting fair Dhollera at 6⅛d. per lb. The agents for native firms having entirely withdrawn from the market, dealers have been unable to sustain their demands, and as prices have in consequence given way, a considerable business has been done on European account during the fortnight, the transactions amounting to 750 bales Sawginned at Rs. 199, and 1,350 bales Compta at Rs. 170-5, and there are still several orders in the market at about the above prices. On the Coast about 250 bales Sawginned have been bought at Rs. 206. We quote Sawginned Rs. 200-5, Compta Rs. 175-80, f.o.b. Carwar, February shipment. The rates vary according to time of shipment, as all the cotton available for immediate despatch has been bought up, and dealers will accept lower rates, if time be given them to bring supplies from distant villages. The quantity of old cotton still remaining above Ghaut is very large; we should say it must be double that of last year, and will probably not be entirely removed until long after the new crop comes to market. The stock on the Coast has also, up to the present time, been unusually small this year, but despatches in quantity hence have now commenced. The new crop promises to be an excellent one, both in quantity and quality. We have never in former years seen the plants look so well as they do just now, and the staple of the small lots that we have seen already picked is everything that can be wished for. Contracts can be made at Rs. 205 with 75 per cent. advance, or Rs. 212 with 25 per cent. advance, April shipment, from Carwar. There are several orders in the market, but the limits are too low to admit of their execution.

Imports.—Bombay, Feb. 4.—The dulness in all descriptions of imports continues. In the beginning of the week there was some inquiry on account of the interior, but it soon fell off, first holders being eager to meet it. Grey Goods: A better feeling has prevailed, with an advance of ¼ annas per piece, but the market has again been dull for the last three or four days, and the said advance has been entirely lost. Shirtings: About 5,000 pieces 39-inch 6 lbs. have been sold at Rs. 4-1¼ to 4-3½; in 6½ lbs. about 1,250 pieces were taken off at Rs. 4-6 to 4-10; about 18,000 pieces 7 lbs. changed hands at Rs. 5-9¾; about 500 pieces 7¼ lbs. touched Rs. 5-9; in 8½ lbs. about 28,000 pieces realised Rs. 5-0½ to 5-13. Of Printers, the following sales only have transpired, viz.: About 500 pieces 2½ lbs., at Rs. 1-15; and about 250 pieces 3½ lbs., at Rs. 2-8½. In Madapollams about 1,300 pieces 2½ lbs. were taken off at Rs. 1-12½; of 3 lbs., about 10,000 pieces changed hands at Rs. 2-1 to 2-2½. Of T-Cloths, about 500 pieces 2½ lbs. (Blue ends), at Rs. 2-3; about 2,000 pieces 4 lbs. (Blue ends), at Rs. 2-5½. Of Jacconets, about 3,000 pieces 40-inch 2½ lbs. were sold at Rs. 1-10; about 1,000 pieces 2¾ lbs., at Rs. 1-15; and about 3,500 pieces 45-inch 2½ lbs., at Rs. 2-5½ to 2-5½. Bleached Goods continue dull. The following sales have transpired during the week, viz.: About 700 pieces Shirtings, at Rs. 5-8 to 10; about 1,200 pieces Mulls, at Rs. 2-10 to 3-10; and about 1,900 pieces Cambrics, at Rs. 2-6 to 2-9. Dyed and Printed Goods: Sales as follows, viz.: About 1,000 pieces Orange Jacconets, at Rs. 2-10 to 2-11; and about 600 pieces Cambrics, at Rs. 2-13. Turkey Red Goods: There has been a better feeling during the week, but no change has taken place in prices. The only sale we have to report has been in Cambrics, viz.: About 5,000 pieces, at Rs. 4-1 to 4-9. Grey Yarns: The market has continued dull, except for 50's, 60's, and 70's Mule Twist, in each of which descriptions an advance of ¼ anna per lb. has taken place. Metals: The market has continued dull, with little or no change in prices. Sales as follows, viz.: About 500 cwts. Yellow Metal Braziers, at Rs. 37; and about 1,250 candies Iron, British Bar, at Rs. 20-4.

Exports.—Bombay, Feb. 4.—Cotton: Our market has been unusually active, in consequence of the belief that there would be a considerable advance in the Liverpool Market, as the armistice of twenty-one days would probably end in a declaration of peace. The business done in Bombay for export in the week amounts to about 40,000 candies, of which, however, about 3,500 candies were purchased on the 27th and 28th January, on the announcement of the armistice, at about Rs. 5 to 10 per candy above our last quotations. Since the 28th the market has been very quiet, and the advance has been lost. Among the purchases made in the week there were—of Old Cotton, 900 candies of Dholleral at prices ranging from Rs. 175 to 200 per candy, according to quality; 300 candies of Dharwar, Sawginned, at Rs. 200 to 179; and 200 candies of Veravul, at Rs. 171 to 180; and of New Cotton, 1,500 candies of Comrawuttee, deliverable in thirty days, at Rs. 196 to 205½; 800 candies of Akola, at Rs. 206 to 211; 450 candies of Hinguanght, at Rs. 217½ to 222½; and 150 candies of Machine-ginned Broach, deliverable in thirty days, at Rs. 218 to 220. The market closes quiet.

Official Papers.

THE NEW DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE AND COMMERCE.

The official correspondence on this subject has been made public. It consists of a despatch of the Government of India to the Secretary of State, dated April 6, 1870, and the reply thereto (dated Sept. 22, 1870), which letter we here give. The other papers are a correspondence which passed in 1869 between the India-office and the Manchester Cotton Supply Association, and which has been either wholly or partly published before.

No. 61, dated Sept. 22, 1870.

From the Secretary of State for India to the Government of India.

I have had under my consideration in Council the despatch from your Excellency in Council in the Public Department, dated April 6 last (No. 40), in which you propose for my acceptance a plan for the establishment of a distinct branch of the Secretariat, to which shall be confided the supervision of all measures having for their object the improvement and development of the agriculture, commerce, and industrial arts of India.

2. Before expressing any opinion as to the necessity of appointing an additional department of the Secretariat for these purposes, I would remark on the plan under which the revenue, agriculture, and commercial affairs of Government have hitherto been conducted. The several Revenue Boards of Bengal, Madras, and the North-West Provinces, and the Revenue Commissioners in Bombay, have been specially charged with these very duties, and although commercial interests have possibly not met with the support which those connected with commerce demand, the Government of India and the subordinate Governments have been always forward in the promotion of schemes for the improvement of agriculture and the development of the resources of the Empire.

3. The plan which you propose to me involves little more than a return to the system formerly prevailing under the Government of India, when the supervision of all matters connected with revenue, agriculture, and commerce, from whatever province they might emanate, was concentrated in the office of the Secretary for the Revenue Department.

4. The relations in which the Government stands to the owners and occupiers of land in India is altogether peculiar, and, however that relation may be described, it is certain that, with the exception of the permanently-settled provinces of Bengal, the Government has a direct and immediate interest in the improvement of agriculture which is possessed by no Government in Europe.

5. The Government of India has never held the doctrine that agricultural improvement is a matter to be left entirely to private enterprise and private interests. It has concerned itself, at great expense, and with marked success, in the improvement of existing methods of cultivation, and particularly in the introduction of new products. Among the branches of industry to which the attention of the Government has been directed, those now mentioned may be particularly enumerated, viz.:—Cotton, tea, coffee, sugar, spices, linseed, cinchona, saltpetre, soda, oil-seeds, jute, rheea, and other fibres, iron, coal, teak and other forest products, agricultural exhibitions, silk.

6. The reason for including the land revenue in the same department with agriculture appear to be conclusive. The application of measures for the improvement of agriculture must in the last resort be mainly left to the collectors of districts, and there is no other agency spread over all India which is capable of attending to the matter. The development of the agricultural resources of the districts committed to their charge has already been regarded as one of their primary duties, and numerous instances might be quoted to show that it has not been neglected.

7. The Forest Department, now under the Public Works Secretary, would, of course, form part of the proposed branch of the administration, as also all measures for the development of the mineral resources of India, and of the fisheries, to which considerable attention has recently been paid.

8. I am, indeed, generally of opinion that the subjects mentioned in the early portion of your Excellency's despatch will fall naturally within the purview of the department proposed to be formed. Some few, however, such as the "law of patents" and "questions relating to the census and to emigration," referred to in your eighteenth paragraph, seem to me to have no direct or immediate connection with the matters forming the general business of the department, and had better probably remain with those departments to which they are now attached.

9. With regard to the miscellaneous or separate revenues (opium, salt, customs, abkaree, stamps, income-tax,), I shall have some remarks to make in a later portion of this despatch, but I may here state my general views on each particular item.

10. Of opium, it may be said that it is not only a product of the soil, and, as such, capable of improvement in its mode of cultivation, but it is also to a large extent manufactured as an article of commerce under the direct agency of the officers of Government. Opium, therefore, would seem to fall naturally under the cognisance of a Department of Agriculture and Commerce.

11. Much the same may be said of salt. The manufacture of that article on Government account has ceased in the Bengal provinces, but active measures are now in progress for carrying on the manufacture in the North-West, particularly on the Sambhur Lake, the saline resources of which have been recently ceded to us, under treaty, by the Rajahs of Jeypore and Jodhpore. Much attention is paid to the production of salt in the North-Western Provinces and Oudh, under excise regulations, by private agency. The salt mines in the Punjab are worked on Government account. The supply of salt in the Madras presidency is still under the control of Government. In view of these facts, I am of opinion that the supervision of the salt revenue of India should properly be committed to the same department.

12. I am more disposed to hesitate in regard to the transfer to that department of the Customs' revenue of India, which would, however, seem properly to attach itself to its commercial branch. It may seem that the regulation of the trade of India, so far as the Government is concerned, has little to do with the agricultural branch of the department. But it must be remembered that the trade of India is dependent on its export, and that the exports must in the present and probably long-future state of things in that country be provided from its agricultural products. It is, therefore, quite possible that one department of the Government might be stimulating the production of a particular article, and incurring considerable expense thereon, while another department, in the supposed interest of the revenue, might be supporting a fiscal policy, the direct tendency of which would be to repress the trade encouraged by Government in another department. It may also be observed that the opium revenue, whether from the produce of Malwa or the Bengal Agencies, is merely an export duty, levied in an irregular form, on the opium shipped to China and the Straits from Calcutta and Bombay; and that the salt revenue of Bengal is almost entirely due to the duty levied on the import of the article into Calcutta; while in the North-West the revenue is mainly dependent on the Customs duty levied on the import of the salt across the land frontier line. On a consideration of all these circumstances, I am disposed to think that the Customs revenue should be placed under the control of the department.

13. In regard to the minor branches of the miscellaneous revenue (abkarree, stamps, and income-tax), they involve few administrative considerations, and require little more than the due collection of amounts fixed by the law. Their supervision might, as it seems to me, be left either with the finance department, where it now lies, or be transferred to the proposed department, as considerations of convenience might suggest.

14. The projected consolidation into one department of the various kindred matters referred to in the preceding paragraphs has necessarily led your Excellency to a consideration of the manner in which the several subjects are now distributed among the different branches of your secretariat. It has thus been prominently brought to your notice that, while matters relating to the administration of the land revenue in Bengal and the North-Western Provinces, as well as references on the same subject from the Governments of Madras and Bombay, have been dealt with in the Home secretariat, all questions involving similar principles which may arise in the Central Provinces, the Punjab, Oude, or the Berar districts, are referred to you through the Foreign Secretary. The miscellaneous revenues are administered by the financial department, while the superintendence of the forests and fisheries is committed to the public works department. Thus the work which is done, as well as that which is left undone, and which, under a logical or scientific arrangement, would form the business of one homogeneous department, is scattered over four branches of the secretariat, each of which has its own proper work to perform, and probably regards these matters as extraneous and intrusive, and deals with them accordingly in a manner more or less perfunctory.

15. I am accordingly prepared to express my concurrence with the view expressed by your lordship in Council, so far as regards the formation of a special department, to be charged with the duties mentioned in your despatch, but I am unable to give more than a provisional sanction to the arrangement in the shape in which it is presented to me.

16. It is obvious from the papers before me that your lordship's original intention was to propose the establishment of "an additional secretariat to the Government of India," and that this scheme has, with the view of conciliating the opposition of the dissentient members of your Council, been reduced to the more moderate dimensions of recommending the appointment of a Director-General of Agriculture and Commerce, under the Home Secretary, whose functions are to "embrace all matters connected with the administration of the Land revenue, salt, and opium, with the development of all branches of the material resources of the country, and with statistics of every description."

17. It appears to me to be hardly possible to place an officer charged with these important duties in even nominal dependence on a secretary whose general work would be of an altogether different character. It will, I consider, be necessary in the first instance to make a much more complete inquiry into the present distribution of work among the several branches of the secretariat than has yet been attempted, with the view of ascertaining precisely the amount of relief that will be afforded by the withdrawal of the work which will be transferred to the proposed department, the extent of the work still remaining to each office, and how far they will be able to contribute out of their existing establishments towards the formation of the working staff of the new office.

18. You will of course endeavour to keep the cost of the remodelled secretariat within moderate limits; and it appears to me that some reduction of work will probably be found practicable, without detriment to the public service, in the discontinuance of returns, reports, and references, which are now in many instances needlessly required from the subordinate governments and administrations. It should be remembered that the chief revenue work of the Empire is conducted by the local government, by whom all measures of improvement must chiefly be carried out. These governments, from their constitution and experience of the districts which they administer, are fully competent for the duties required of them, and can only be embarrassed by a too minute interference with their proceedings. It seems to me essential that the proposed office should be founded on the understanding that, at least so far as the Governments of Madras and Bombay and the Lieutenant-governors are concerned, its duties will be most efficiently performed by confining them to a general supervision of the principles of revenue administration, and by scrupulously avoiding all interference with details, and with the ordinary powers of the local authorities. Special care must be taken that the concentration of the work under one head does not lead to the creation of business.

19. The head of the proposed department will, I presume, require one if not two, skilled Assistant, selected for special competency; but I should hope that the general staff of the office might be altogether provided from the clerks who might be transferred from other branches of the Secretariat, which will then find themselves relieved from an appreciable portion of their present work. You will furnish me with a full statement of the proposed establishment of the new office, showing its cost, together with the savings which may be effected in other departments, and also carefully prepared information as to the duties which will remain to be performed by those departments; but I desire that no action may be taken in the matter until my formal sanction shall have been received.

20. The proposed department, if established, should be designated the "Department of Revenue, Agriculture, and Commerce."

21. It appears to me that, in devising and commencing measures of agricultural improvement, much advantage might be gained by gradually extending the scope of the duties and the sphere of the operations of the Cotton Commissioner in the Central Provinces and the Berars. The report of that officer shows that he has not limited his care to the particular duties for which he was appointed, and which he has discharged with acknowledged success, but that he has also bestowed much attention on Indian agriculture generally.

22. In inaugurating the department, to which will be committed the charge of the general supervision of all the great branches of revenue, it appears to me that great care must be taken in clearly defining its relations with the Finance Department, which depends on those sources for its means of action.

23. With regard to the Land Revenue, on which the Finance Minister cannot operate for Budget purposes, its administration may be left without other control than that of the Supreme Government. In respect, however, to the miscellaneous branches, particularly Salt, Opium, and Customs, it would appear necessary that some means should be devised to obviate any antagonism which might possibly arise between the views of the Financial Minister, proposing to legislate in the interest of the revenue, and the views of a department specially charged with the support of the interests of commerce and agriculture. From the remark in paragraph 17 of your despatch, that "if such a department had existed, it could never have tolerated the continuance of duties such as those which are still levied on sugar exported from the North-West Provinces across the Inland Customs line," it is clearly your Excellency's intention that such a department should possess a potential voice in matters of commercial legislation. Such a course might cause embarrassment to the Minister charged with the control of the finances, and it seems to me important that means should be taken to guard against it.

24. The distribution of business among the members of Council rests, of course, with the Governor-General for the time being. It would seem to be scarcely possible to place in the hands of the Financial Member, possessing, it may be, no Indian experience, the supervision also of the Department of Revenue, Agriculture, and Commerce, but it is open to remark that such an arrangement, if found practicable, would effectually remove all danger of antagonism.

25. Under existing rules, all propositions for expenditure, in whatever department they may arise, are subjected to the scrutiny of the Financial Department before they are submitted for sanction. In the same manner, it appears to me, while the ordinary administration of the miscellaneous branches of revenue might be left to the supervision of the proposed department, it might be laid down as a rule that all suggestions for changes directly affecting their financial results, such as alterations in the rates of Customs duties, in the duties on Salt, in the rates of Malwa Opium Pass Duty, in the prices to be paid for Bengal Opium, should, in the first instance, be submitted to the Financial Department, and be brought before the Council by the member having charge of that department. Such a course of proceeding would, as it seems to me, reduce to the lowest point, even if it did not altogether remove, all risk of inconvenient antagonism.

26. Having said thus much, I shall only add that I attach much interest to the consolidation into one department of all matters affecting Revenue, Agriculture, and Commerce, on the basis, though not in the precise form, which is suggested by your Excellency in Council, and that I shall anxiously await your reply.

KNIGHTHOODS.—Friday's Gazette announces that the Queen has made the following appointments to the Order of St. Michael and St. George:—To be Ordinary Members of the Second Class or Knights Commanders of the said Order:—The Hon. A. H. Gordon, C.M.G., Governor of the Island of Mauritius. Sir R. G. MacDonnel, Knight, C.B., Governor of the Colony of Hong Kong.

THE BRINDISI ROUTE.—A correspondent is desirous of giving us the result of his experience of this journey, and states that he left last Friday at 8.45, arrived at Brindisi exactly at the advertised time; had two intervals in travelling allowed each day for meals, one of half an hour, the other of an hour, and came through without any difficulty, except the constant change of carriages necessitated by the present system on the German lines. The mails came through in the same van the whole distance. There would, therefore, appear to be no practical difficulty in having a through carriage sent with the van, which should contain luggage as well as passengers.—Times, Feb. 20.

Miscellaneous.

THE BODEN SANSKRIT SCHOLARSHIP has been awarded to Mr. Charles Henry Jopp, scholar of New College, Oxford.

INDO-EUROPEAN TELEGRAPH COMPANY.—The report of the Indo-European Telegraph Company for the eleven months ending 31st December last, states that the gross revenue amounted to £25,268.

BRITISH INDIAN EXTENSION TELEGRAPH COMPANY.—It is announced that the gross traffic over the British Indian Extension Telegraph Companies cable—Singapore to Madras—for the four weeks ending Saturday last, amounted to £3,739.

GENERAL GORDON.—We hear that Major-General the Hon. A. H. Gordon is actively at work, urging on the authorities to have his case reconsidered, and it is not improbable that some move will be made in Parliament on the subject.

THE PRINCESS LOUISE.—We have authority to state that the marriage of her Royal Highness the Princess Louise will be celebrated at Windsor Castle on the 21st of March next, and that, although the ceremony will be performed in St. George's Chapel, it will be conducted in the same private manner as that of her Royal Highness the Princess Helena in the private chapel of the Castle.

THE INDIAN RELIEFS.—The programme of Indian reliefs for the season 1871-72 is foreshadowed as follows:—The regiments to go out will in all probability be the 44th, 70th, 54th, 1st battalion 18th and 68th—the 18th going to Malta to relieve the 48th, which will proceed on to India. The corps to come home are the 1st battalion 19th, 79th, 38th, 3rd battalion Rifle Brigade, and 104th Fusiliers.

BRANDING IN THE ARMY.—We rejoice to hear that the Secretary of State for War has determined to abolish forthwith the system of branding deserters and men of bad character in the Army. This is a measure quite in the right direction towards raising the character of the class from which the ranks of the Army are recruited.—Broad Arrow.

Bonus Compensation.—The numerous class of Indian officers who have what is called "bonus" claims, are again up in arms for their old cause. This is in consequence of the appearance of the Government scheme for reimbursing retiring officers, in the extra regulation value of their commissions, in connection with the abolition of "purchase." Indian officers have renewed their agitation of the much-vexed question of "bonus" restitution, incited thereto on the following considerations. If, they say, it is conceded to retiring officers of the Army generally, to reimburse them their commissions according to the extra-regulation value, the same boon cannot with any justice be withheld from retired officers of the Indian Army, who also simply claim fair compensation for the prescriptive value of their commissions. The nature of the two claims is precisely similar the one to the other.—Broad Arrow.

Specie from the East.—The steamer Ceylon has brought £883,539 in specie, of which £590,242 consists of gold, and £293,297 of silver. Annexed are the particulars, viz.:—From Melbourne, £486,610; Sydney, £44,936; Galle, £136,140; Shanghai, £90,480; Yokohama, £52,392; Hong Kong, £43,325; and Calcutta, £29,656.

The Queen's Court.—The Queen held a Court at Buckingham Palace on the 21st inst. Their Highnesses the Maharajah and the Maharanee Duleep Sing arrived at the Palace, attended by Colonel Oliphant. His Highness the Nawab Nazim of Bengal and the Princes Ali Kudr Hassan Ali Bahadoor and Suleiman Kudr Vahid Ali Bahadoor were also present. Sir Donald F. McLeod, K.C.S.I. and C.B., late Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, was presented to her Majesty by the Secretary of State for India.

Transport Service.—We are pleased to find that the reorganisation of the Transport Department has been completed by the Admiralty, and that with the sanction of the Secretary of State for India in Council the clerical establishment of the India branch of the department has been fixed at two senior clerks, five clerks and five writers, presided over by a superintendent, in keeping with the store, victualling, and contract branches of the Admiralty.—Army and Navy Gazette.

Financial.—A Parliamentary return, issued on Feb. 18, shows that the registered debt of India amounts to £66,889,597; the loans to £2,559,629; Treasury notes, £1,074,411; service funds, £4,512,898; bills payable, £266,409; deposits and miscellaneous, £10,350,750; total, £85,363,694, of which about seven-eighths bear interest. As regards England, the liabilities amount to the following,—viz.. East India Bonds, £4,017,617; East India Debentures, £5,000,0000; India Five per Cent. Stock, £17,200,000; India Four per Cent. Stock, £11,000,000; owing for stores purchased for India, £135,000; Admiralty claims, £102,500; capital of guaranteed companies remaining in the Home Treasury, £2,524,784; miscellaneous, £126,183; total, £40,106,083. Besides these sums, there is the capital stock of the East India Company, £6,000,000.

Report of the Civil Service Commissioners.—Her Majesty's Civil Service Commissioners have issued their Fifteenth Annual Report, from which we make the subjoined extracts:—"By the order of your Majesty in Council, dated the 4th of June, 1870, important changes were introduced in the method of filling appointments in the Civil Service; but as the most material of these changes did not come into operation until after the period to which this Report refers, we have thought it better to defer to another occasion any detailed account of the new system, and to confine ourselves for the present to a brief statistical summary of our proceedings up to the 30th day of June last. The total number of candidates whose names have appeared upon our lists from the first constitution of the Commission in May, 1855, up to the 30th of June, 1870, has been 71,971. By far the greater part of these, i.e., 60,486, were candidates for situations for which, under your Majesty's Orders in Council, a Certificate of Qualification is required; but 6,690 of them were examined for other situations in the Home Civil Service for which certificates have not been considered to be necessary; 4,607 were competitors for the Civil Service of India; and 188 were candidates for admission to the Army under arrangements which will be explained below. After referring in detail to the examinations held under the Orders in Council for situations in the Home Civil Service, the report proceeds to review the competition for appointments in the Civil Service of India; the anual open competition for appointments in the Civil Service of India took place in April, 1870 when 332 candidates presented themselves, and were examined by the gentlemen named in the following list:—English Language, Literature, History, and Composition.—M. Arnold, Esq.; L. H. Courtney, Esq.; J. G. Fitch, Esq.; C. H. Pearson, Esq.; W. Stebbing, Esq.; C. Knight Watson, Esq. Greek and Latin Languages, &c.—Rev. Lewis Campbell; Rev. Osborne Gordon; Rev. Imperial Parliament.

House of Commons, Thursday, Feb. 23.—The Euphrates Valley Railway.—Sir G. Jenkinson gave notice that, on an early day, he would call attention to the necessity of establishing a more rapid line of communication with India by means of a railway from the Mediterranean to the Persian Gulf by the valley of the Euphrates and would move for a committee to inquire into the subject.

Commissions in the Army.—Mr. Cardwell, in reply to Mr. Cave, said that no second examination would take place; but care would be taken that the efficiency of those gentlemen who passed last year would be secured.

Mails for the East via Brindisi.—In answer to Mr. Magniac, Mr. Monsell said that the arrangements with the foreign Governments through whose territory the mails for the East via Brindisi passed were made so recently that there would be no use in making any application at present for a reduction in the postal charges.

The Army Reorganisation Bill.—Lord Eustace Cecil expressed a hope that the report of the Inspector-General of Recruiting, and the estimate for the compensation of officers on the abolition of the purchase system, would be placed in the hands of members before the second reading of the Army Reorganisation Bill was taken. Mr. Cardwell replied that the papers in question had been formally laid on the table, and would soon be in the hands of members.

The Abyssinian Expedition.—Mr. Candlish gave notice that on that day four weeks he would call the attention of the House to the Abyssinian Expedition, and move a resolution on the subject.

Examination of Officers in the Army.—Mr. Stapleton gave notice that, on going into committee on the Army Estimates, he would call attention to the examinations of lieutenants and captains in the Army.

East India Finance.—The orders of the day having been postponed, Mr. Gladstone moved that a select committee be appointed to inquire into the finances and financial administration of India. They were of opinion that it would be desirable to obtain the most efficient and the strongest committee possible, and they believed that this would be best secured by having a joint committee formed of members of both Houses, the chairman, as a matter of courtesy, being selected by the committee itself. These proposals he begged to submit for the approval of the House.—Colonel Sykes said that, as the condition of India was by no means satisfactory, the inquiry ought not to be limited to questions of finance. Mr. E. B. Denison thought the Prime Minister was bound to give the House stronger reasons for departing from the course that had usually been followed. He maintained that the inquiry, in several points of view, was unnecessary; that the proposal involved an aspersion upon the intelligence and competent capacity of the House; that the matter proposed to be inquired into, if not directly, indirectly involved monetary questions bearing upon the taxpayers of this country; and that the composition of the committee—half of peers and half of members of the Lower House—would, of necessity, have in it a larger proportion of the official element than was desirable. He much feared that if the proposition were acceded to, there would be four ex-Secretaries of State and one Governor-General sitting as a "band of brothers" to inquire into acts committed, very likely, during their official career. At the proper time he should certainly move an amendment to the course proposed.—Sir C. Wingfield considered it inconsistent policy to place the conduct of an investigation like the one proposed in the hands of persons who might themselves be the very subjects of the inquiry. Surely, if the experience of those noble lords was so desirable, they might be examined as witnesses by the committee, and their evidence valued accordingly. (Hear, hear.)—Mr. R. N. Fowler suggested the propriety of extending the members of the committee beyond twenty-two members, as proposed.—Mr. Gilpin said that, if it were in order, he would move an addition to the motion to the effect that such committee be wholly composed of members of this House. It would, no doubt, be their object in this inquiry to get all the information they could from what he might call experts, and the noble lords alluded to might be most valuable as witnesses, but not as judges.—Mr. Kinnaird said it was necessary that the committee should have the confidence of the people of India.—Mr. Disraeli gave every credit to the Government for the motives which had induced them to make this proposition; but there were difficulties which the Government should consider before they asked the House to take the course proposed. He concurred with the right hon. gentleman in regretting the absence of his right hon. friend the member for Devonshire. There were, however, occasions in politics when men were bound to leave even their Parliamentary duties in order to serve the Government of the country, and his right hon. friend was influenced by the highest motives in the course which he had taken. (Hear, hear.) With regard to the present question, to ask for a joint committee was a very unusual course. Although they had had joint committees before, they had generally been on technical subjects; but the inquiry of the committee proposed in this case touched upon a very large subject and upon a question which had hitherto been considered the peculiar jurisdiction of the House of Commons, namely, the management of the finances. The recommendation of the proposal was, that it would ensure on the committee the presence of persons of adequate official experience; but was it worth while, in order to obtain the presence of official experience, to take a course so unusual as a joint committee? He did not think there would be any difficulty in obtaining members of the committee who, though they had no official connection with India, were well acquainted with the subject. On his own side of the House his hon. friend the member for Huntingdon (Mr. T. Baring), who was chairman of the Indian committee in 1852, and his right hon. friend the member for Shoreham (Mr. S. Cave) would be very suitable persons to place on such a committee. He felt that the objections to the course which had been suggested were very weighty, and he trusted therefore that the Government would not press it on the House.—Mr. GLADSTONE was not convinced by the arguments which had been used, and they seemed to him to partake of the nature of superstition. He must express his decided dissent from the view which had been expressed by the right hon. gentleman with regard to the title of the House of Lords to consider Indian finance. He had always strenuously defended the rights of this House in matters of finance, and it appeared to him that their exclusive right to deal with finance arose out of the circumstance that they represented the people of England. That in no way extended to Indian finance, and the Act of Parliament regulating the Government of India with respect to the presentation of accounts dealt with the two Houses alike. However, the Government considered the general approval of the House an essential condition of the success of their proposal; and as there was some difference of opinion, they would not submit the subsequent motion for a joint committee, which would be necessary to give effect to it. (Hear, hear.) The motion for a committee was then agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, FRIDAY, Feb. 24.—ABOLITION OF PURCHASE.—In reply to Sir H. HOARE, Mr. CARDWELL said that, in the Government scheme for the abolition of the purchase system, a colonel acceding to the rank of major-general would not be included. It was not intended to recognise any new claim, but simply to indemnify those who had a right to sell.—In reply to Colonel C. LINDSAY, Mr. CARDWELL said that the widow, children, or next-of-kin of an officer who died before he had received the customary price of his commission would not be entitled to any indemnity under the present regulations, and no indemnity would be provided for them. But, in the case of an officer who died in action or on duty, his widow, children, or next-of-kin would be entitled to indemnity under the Royal warrant.

ARMY REGULATION BILL.—Mr. CARDWELL, in reply to Mr. RAIKES, said that he was not in a position to give a promise as to the particular time he would lay on the table the new regulations regarding promotion, but he would endeavour to do so as soon as possible.—In reply to Colonel ANSON, the right hon. gentleman stated that he thought it better that the Bill should be considered as a whole rather than in parts. He did not think that the gallant gentleman would countenance anything that prejudiced good order or discipline. It was possible for an officer to communicate his feelings to members of the House without incurring any reproach on that score.—Mr. CARDWELL, in reply to Major DICKSON, also said that he had not prohibited promotions by sale in succession, but everything had been done in strict accordance with precedents.

NAVIGATION OF THE GULF OF MANAAR.—On the motion for going into Committee of Supply, Sir J. ELPHINSTONE called the attention of the House to the necessity of cutting through Adam's Bridge, and thereby obviating the necessity of circumnavigating the island of Ceylon. The hon. and gallant gentleman said that by performing such a work the voyage to India would be shortened by 363 miles, making on the double voyage 726 miles, a matter of great importance to the trade of India. Imperfect as the mode of communication at present was, the trade had increased from 7,000 tons in 1829 to 200,000 tons last year, and only a small sum of money would be required to effect the object proposed. Last year 2,222 vessels passed through the channel, and of that number only two were lost. What he proposed to do was to cut through a promontory in the Madras Presidency, a passage of 2½ miles in length, by 500 yards in breadth. The height of the land was only 12 feet, and the estimated cost would be about £91,000. He believed that if the work were constructed it would pay a handsome profit to the Government on the outlay.—Mr. A. B. SMITH, Mr. EASTWICK, and Colonel SYKES also pressed on the Government the importance of the work.—Mr. GRANT DUFF admitted that such a channel as that suggested would add greatly to the commercial facilities of the world. The Ceylon Government, however, did not think itself sufficiently interested to throw the cost of the work on its subjects, nor, on the other hand, was the Imperial Government disposed to undertake it. The Indian Government proposed to continue deepening the existing channel, but they had no intention of cutting through "Adam's Bridge."

FINANCIAL STATEMENT FOR INDIA.—The House having gone into Committee, Mr. GRANT DUFF rose to make his annual statement. He said he was more happy to make it at the beginning of the session than at a later period. Having referred to the statement of 1869, the hon. gentleman said that the actual accounts for the year ending 31st March, 1870, were based on the documents circulated a few days ago, and upon a telegraphic summary of the regular estimate, that was to say of the apportionate accounts received on the 22nd of this month. When he made his first statement he had to announce that the revenue was £1,000 000 to the bad, and on the second occasion it was £2,800,000. On this occasion he had a much more agreeable duty to announce, that in the year ending 31st March, 1870, there was £120,000 to the good, while there was every probability, according to information in their possession, there would be this year nearly £1,000,000 to the good. The estimates, as laid before Parliament, for the year ending 31st March, 1870, showed a deficit of £563,495. The actuals on the 31st March last showed that our receipts were better than those of the year before by £1,638,390. The first item was an increase of £1,161,848, from an increase in the land revenue. There was also an increase of £600,000 from the raising of the income-tax from 1 to 2 per cent., and there was an increase of £300,000 on the salt duties, which had been raised 7½d. for 82½ pounds. These are increases of gross revenue. There was a decrease from the general depression of trade of £500,000 on opium. The general result was that the revenue was better this year in comparison with that of last year by £1,638,390. With respect to the year 1870-71, the year which was just drawing to a close, there was this important fact to be noted—that opium, contrary to all expectation, had come to the rescue; but he should be sorry to unsay anything that he had said on former occasions about the great importance of watching carefully the opium revenue. The figures showed that in the year the income of India would be about £51,000,000, and the expenditure about £50,000,000, leaving a surplus of nearly £1,000,000. With regard to the year which would begin on 1st April, he could, of course, say very little, because the committee were aware that the Home Government did not take the initiative in matters of finance. There were, however, a few points of interest on which he could give some explanation. And, first, as regarded the income-tax of 7½d. in the pound. To that tax the Home Government had consented with very great reluctance; and he was happy to be able to say that, unless some quite extraordinary and almost impossible emergency occurred within the next few weeks, it would most certainly be diminished. (Hear, hear.) The experiment of financial decentralisation was about to be tried by enlarging the powers of the governments of the provinces; but, while the Government expected to save £300,000 upon the estimate, on the other hand there would be a considerable diminution in its receipts; for the income-tax would bring in a considerably smaller amount than it had in the previous year. In speaking, however, of the finances of the coming year, he should be cautious; but of one thing they might be certain, and that was that they would have the usual difficulty in making the ends meet. But why should there be that difficulty? There were two reasons for it. In the first place, we were performing the most expensive duty of Government for a population of 200,000,000, with a revenue derived from only 150,000,000; and, in the second place, we were performing the duties of Government after a civilised and scientific fashion, with a taxation which would better become an uncivilised and unscientific age. The expedients that had been tried to equalise income and expenditure were these: Some form of reduction in the income-tax, revised customs duties, and the raising of a salt tax. It might be asked whether the Government had any doubt as to their being able to retain their present resources, and whether they were as expansive as they might be. In answer he might say they considered the resources were expansive, though not highly so; but, as to their retaining them perpetually, he was not so very sure. He need not repeat what he had said on so many former occasions with regard to the great uncertainty of their opium revenue. With respect to the tax on salt, he had never denied that, sooner or later, it would have to be reduced in certain districts. The few export duties that remained would have to be retained rather on the ground of necessity than of principle. Economy would always be considered, but he could not hope at present to see anything like sweeping reductions. That anything could be done to reduce the expenditure of the army he very much doubted. According to the last returns, there were in India 61,481 European officers and soldiers, and 132,461 native officers and soldiers, independently of military police; and while the British soldier at home was expensive, he was much more costly when on service in the East. He feared there was not the slightest prospect of any reduction in this respect. Railway receipts were gradually improving; the land revenue was slowly on the increase; the sale of waste lands would, it was expected, prove somewhat more remunerative; the material prosperity of the country would, in all probability, enable it to consume a larger amount of taxable articles, and their debt, after all, was but a little more than a few years of their income—(hear, hear)—but still he should be acting very wrongly if he sought to leave on the minds of the committee the impression that the financial prospects of India were couleur de rose. He was glad to say that everywhere, except on the very edge of their frontiers, they had quietude. As to public works, he was afraid he could not state anything that could be regarded as certain, and for the reason that, the financial year not having been completed, he had not the figures sufficiently authentic to justify him in laying them before the House. He could, however, say that public works were progressing as satisfactorily as circumstances would permit. Improved sanitary measures were beginning to be appreciated by the natives, and the general surveys were being conducted with zeal. The shocking death of Mr. Hayward had caused the greatest indignation and horror throughout India. Reverting to the trade prospects of India, the honourable gentleman said that considerable attion was being paid to the production of silk. It seemed at one time as if the great war which had been lately going on would produce an unfavourable impression on the trade of India; but the anticipation had proved exaggerated, though not wholly unfounded. In an excitable population like that of India the war had produced no little political feverishness. Rumours and speculations had been rife in the bazaars; but there had been no cause for serious uneasiness. An increased number of natives were resorting to Europe to educate themselves partly for the civil service and partly for the professions. Education was extending among the middle and higher classes; and of late the Government had been giving increased attention to the diffusion of elementary education. If they could penetrate the people of this country with the idea that they were not only a great European, a great American, a great Australian, and a great Oceanic Power, but were also inconceivably the greatest Asiatic Power, they would get rid of that fussy self-consciousness which made them perpetually torment themselves with what other nations were thinking of their attitude, and simply resolve to do their duty as a great cosmopolitan Power—(cheers). The hon. member concluded by moving formal resolutions on Indian finance.—Mr. Cave pointed out that, for three years, the revenue had been stationary, while the expenditure was steadily advancing. If it were not for the opium revenue, there would be a great deficit; and this was a matter which could not be viewed without uneasiness. The native population of India were very suspicious of novelty, and they preferred to bear a heavier burden in the shape of an old tax than a lighter burden in the shape of a new. In those parts of India where the population was stationary, and where artificial wants prevailed, a system of direct tax upon property, and indirect taxation upon luxuries, was perhaps the most satisfactory. But where the population was migratory another mode of taxation should be adopted. The increase of wages, consequent upon large public works and emigration to the West Indies, enabled the natives of India to live in a much better condition than some years back. His own opinion was that India should be governed in India, and not in this country, and any mistake committed must be corrected there, and not in England. If they could induce the natives to take part in the government of the country, they might, at a future time, entrust them with the administration of the Indian Empire.—Mr. W. Fowler was sorry to say that the statement of the Under-Secretary for India was not very satisfactory. It showed a decrease of £1,000,000 in the expenditure on public works and an increase in the opium revenue. He asserted, upon the assurance of higher authority than his own, that India had need of public works, and that all which had been done was comparatively as nothing to what still remained to be done. The hon. gentleman had told them that the expenditure on public works did not always realise the results that were expected; but that might be owing to the objectionable system of paying for public works out of revenue, instead of out of borrowed money. He believed he was not exaggerating when he said that, by making public works with borrowed money instead of revenue, they would save one-third, on account of the greater rapidity with which they could be carried on and completed. It was not worthy of the Government of a great and advanced nation like England to keep up the opium trade, which was so injurious to the people of China. He rejoiced that the Government had appointed a committee to inquire into the financial administration, and he believed that the committee would go to work in the matter in such a way as would be worthy of members of that House.—Sir C. Wingfield criticised the statement that had been made to the House, and suggested what he thought might be improvements. In the matter of taxation for local purposes, he hoped that no such taxes would be imposed unless with the co-operation of the people of India. He also thought that the people of that Empire ought to have a voice in the representative institutions of the country, and that the anomalous attempt to thrust aside every man who was educated should be abandoned.—Mr. Eastwick hoped that the proceedings of the night would be placed in their true character by the Anglo-Indian press before the Indian people, as showing the desire of the British Parliament to give due attention to Indian affairs, and pressed on the Government that the only means of dealing successfully with Indian finance was by a reduction of expenditure.—The debate was continued by Mr. Dickinson, Mr. Denison, Sir F. Goldsmid, Sir D. Wedderburn, Sir Thomas Bazley, Mr. H. Burke, Sir J. Elphinstone, and Mr. Macfie.—Mr. Grant Duff replied.—The resolution was agreed to.

Petitions Presented.—By Sir Charles Wingfield, from the Council of the East India Association, praying for the appointment of a Select Committee on the affairs of India. By Mr. Kinnaird, from the Directors of the London Missionary Society, in favour of a readjustment of the relations of the Indian Government to the opium traffic, in order to put a stop to the cultivation and sale of opium by the Government within the English provinces of India for the purpose of revenue.

Notices of Motion.—Mr. Rylands gave notice that in committee on the Army Regulations Bill he would move an amendment to prevent compensation being given to officers for sums paid by them for the purchase of their commissions, in violation of the law and contrary to her Majesty's regulations. (Laughter.)—Colonel Sykes gave notice that on the report on the Indian Finance Committee being brought up he would move that it be recommitted.

TRANSMISSION OF INDIAN, &c., MAILS, VIA THE BRENNER PASS AND BRINDISI.

The several lines of mail communication through France being exposed, by the operations of the War, to sudden interruption, the Postmaster-General considers that it has become absolutely necessary to divert the course of the British Overland Indian Mails, and to send them, for the present, through Belgium and Germany, and over the Brenner Pass, to Brindisi.

As the mails despatched on Friday evening will only reach Brindisi, under existing arrangements, a short time before the departure of the Packet, the Supplementary Mails hitherto despatched on Saturday morning will be discontinued.—By command of the Postmaster-General.—General Post-office, October 19, 1870.

THE HISTORY of INDIA, from the Earliest Period to the Close of Lord Dalhousie's Administration in 1856. By JOHN CLARK MARSHMAN.

"Mr. Marshman's has the merit of being a history which it is easy to read and to remember—indeed, it is perhaps the only very readable History of India yet given to the public. Every epoch in Indian annals has been more fully treated of by Mr. Marshman's predecessors in historical inquiry, but the book is original in offering in a moderate compass a comprehensive summary of all the incidents which are most memorable in connection with our control of the Empire. The Third Volume, moreover, is especially valuable, from the fact that the Author's personal recollections carry him back to nearly all the great events which are recorded in it. . . . We may safely commend it to our readers as a work which may be perused with advantage, not less by those who are familiar with Indian history than by those who are ignorant of the subject, and go to Mr. Marshman as their first guide."—The Times.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

Healthy Homes.—Nine-tenths of our ailments might be altogether prevented or directly cured if the first faulty actions were set right. This great end is accomplished with wonderful certainty and safety by Holloway's Pills, which are adapted to the stout as well as to the frail, and are equally suited to every constitution and climate. They purify the blood—that seat of life and source of health—which, in its revivifying streams, diffuses regularity and vigour throughout the system, and gives every organ its proper natural function. Many stomachic maladics, though simple and curable by Holloway's treatment at their outset, become through neglect or mismanagement both very troublesome in their progress and very serious in their results.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, Feb. 11; Agra and Madras, Feb. 9; Calcutta, Feb. 8.

No news of fresh outrages by Looshais has reached us by this mail. A telegram of February 4 from Silchar reports no new raid since the end of January. The Looshais, having done their worst, were supposed to have withdrawn into their own jungles with the plunder they had carried off. Fears were still expressed for Mr. Edgar, who had not been heard of since the 26th January, lest the raiders should try and intercept him on his way back, ignorant as he was by latest accounts of all that had happened. A hundred of the 44th Foot, under Captain Lightfoot, had reached Cachar from Shillong on the evening of February 3. Five hundred policemen, with ten head constables, had been told off for the defence of the frontier. Seventy of the 22nd N.I. have sailed from Calcutta for Chittagong, under Lieutenant Gordon, to relieve any force ordered from the former place to the front. At Sylhet General Bourchier was met by the Commissioner of Dacca and a force of 250 Sepoys. The General had under his command a brigade composed of the 2nd, 4th, 41st, and 43rd N.I.; a force which he himself is said to have considered ample for his purpose. Another account however describes him as having so few troops that he hardly knew to which points he should send them; but this seems hardly compatible with the presence of four native regiments and the advance of other troops to the scene of action. His greatest difficulty lies in the utter want of roads and the scant means of carriage over a wild and difficult country; to say nothing of the short time remaining to him for doing anything before the hot weather and the sickly season set in.

THE savages are said to have fought much more viciously than they did in 1869. The police however are said to have fought well. At Monierkhall twelve sepoys and policemen were killed in a fight which lasted three days against some four hundred of the Howlong tribe, some thirty of whom are said to have been killed or wounded. Twelve sepoys were killed, it seems, in three days' fighting round Dermiakall, which was plundered of all its stores and movables; the coolies, buildings, and master escaping unhurt. The sepoys engaged declare that some old mutineers of 1857 are among the raiders. The loss of life at some places has been serious among the native coolies and villagers. At one village near Jonuggur the Looshais "cut up twenty-two people and carried away other forty out of a total of 114." At Alexandrapore Mr. Winchester and his little girl were shot down at breakfast; Mr. Sellar, the chief manager, escaping wounded into the jungle. Twelve of his coolies were killed or wounded. Luckily for the neighbouring estate of Katlicherra, the noise of the firing—for these Looshais are no longer armed with bows and spears only—alarmed the residents, who had time to get ready before the savages attacked them also. Repulsed that day with loss, the latter on the morrow renewed the attack, but were finally beaten off. How many of the savages have really been hurt or slain it is impossible to say, for they appear to have carried off even their dead. Equal uncertainty overhangs the question as to the relations existing between these raiders, and that branch of the Looshais which obeys Sookpilall, the chief with whom Mr. Edgar has lately been treating. It is quite possible that he has had nothing whatever to do with this new raid.

THE best time of the year for hunting up the Looshais on the Cachar frontier is said to be November. In March the rainy season often begins, and after the first downpour no troops could make their way through the dense tangle of forest and underwood which covers the quaggy ground in all directions. With all February before them however, our troops on the frontier could surely leave their mark. It seems that the first report of a Looshai outrage was made only in 1862, when a band of Kookie marauders entered the southern portion of Sylhet, plundering villages, massacring their male inhabitants, and making captives of the women and children. Independent Tipperah also was harried about the same time. These outrages were supposed to have been reprisals committed by a Kookie tribe for some wrong which one of their chiefs was thought to have sustained at the hands of the British Government. In the present instance, as in 1869, it is supposed, not without reason, that the Looshais have been inspired by a similar feeling to that which has so often roused the American Indians against their white neighbours. They cannot brook the peaceful encroachments of English planters on what they regard as their old hereditary hunting-grounds, where they have been wont to track the elephant for his tusks and the deer for food. To them it makes small difference whether the white man clears the jungle with or without the sanction of his Government. If this be so, we are once more confronted with the problem which both in America and New Zealand is still to solve.

ORDERS have been received in India for the immediate despatch home of the five horse-batteries to which Mr. Cardwell referred in his recent utterances on military matters. The batteries in question have been specified elsewhere. The actual reduction of Indian strength will be far less than appears on the surface, for the complement of all the remaining batteries is to be increased, we hear, by twelve gunners a-piece, while the saving caused by the withdrawal of five batteries will amount to sixty, or as some say to ninety thousand a-year. India will still possess fifteen horse and forty-three light field batteries, two mountain batteries, five Punjab Force batteries of twenty-two guns, and one heavy battery of twelve guns—in all three hundred and nine-four guns, not one too many for Indian needs.

The answers received from India to the questions sent out in July last from the India-office on the subject of Bonus Compensation have just been laid before Parliament. The answer of the Indian Government not only affirms that the instructions sent out in 1866 by Lord Cranborne have been "exactly carried out" by the Local Committees, but opines that "substantial justice has been done to officers by repaying to them all they had paid for steps, minus only such sums as they had gained in pay for promotion obtained by such steps, or as bonus, or by special annuity or retirement." Those officers who have received nothing or next to nothing in return even for actual bonus payments, will no doubt be pleased to hear that such is the view deliberately taken of their case by a Government mainly composed of Covenanted Civil and Military servants, including Major-General H. Norman, whose swift rise in the service has not steeled his heart to the just claims of less fortunate brothers-in-arms. It is odd however to notice the different tone maintained by the Governments of Bombay and Madras, in their remarks on the question whether Lord Cranborne's instructions have been carried out "with due regard to the interests of the officers concerned." The instructions, they admit, have been carried out to the letter; but the interests of the officers have been disregarded in several points for which Lord Cranborne, not the Committees, are deemed responsible. Sir S. Fitzgerald, for instance, points out that the increased pay on promotion, which the Committees had to set off against the bonus-payments, was "granted, not as interest on the money sunk in purchasing, but as remuneration for the performance of larger and more responsible duties." To deduct therefore the amount given as remuneration from the money sunk in purchasing promotion, seems to him not a "strictly justifiable proceeding." Remembering also that the bonus system benefited Government by helping old officers to make way for younger ones, and that officers bought out their seniors not for the "immediate attainment of promotion" so much as the prospect of being bought out in their turn, the Governor of Bombay holds that the question of compensation, so far from being handled in the interests of the officers concerned, has been "looked at from what may be called an actuary's point of view," and therefore the action of the Government "has not been characterised by that liberality which the officers concerned were entitled to expect." He for his own part would "allow a repayment of all sums actually sunk in purchase, and for which no return has been received beyond enhanced pay."

Lieutenant-General Sir A. Spencer, Commander-in-Chief at Bombay, argues quite as strongly against the unfair provisions of Lord Cranborne's Despatch. He impugns the justice of withholding compensation for bonuses paid to invalided officers, and can find no good plea for deducting the money value of enhanced promotion from the amount of each officer's claim. To do so "is in effect to withdraw from an officer on retirement the pay he received for the discharge of duties of the higher grades." He even goes so far as to see in such a process a plan for depriving the officer "of even the interest for the money so invested (often borrowed at a high rate), and which was justly regarded as represented by the increase of pay consequent on the purchased promotion." He points out the special hardship of such a principle, as applied against officers who lost more than they gained in money value by promotions which involved the forfeiture of staff appointments. He even claims some consideration for Lieutenant-Colonels of infantry or cavalry, who subscribed to a line fund for buying out their seniors, and finally pleads for the many officers still serving, who "look on all their previous payments as money sunk for ever, consequent on the altered organisation of the army."

The Madras Despatch says little about the details of Lord Cranborne's scheme for taking away with one hand what had been offered with the other. But it goes straight to the true source of bitterness in pointing out to the Secretary of State that, "while under the old regime officers received all the advantages of accelerated promotion and a bonus on retirement, under the arrangements sanctioned by Lord Cranborne they receive only the difference between payments made and immediate advantages gained, no provision whatever having been made for the ultimate advantage of a bonus on retirement of which the reorganisation of the Indian Army deprived them." The Madras Controller-General of Military Accounts lays most stress on the hardship caused in many cases by introducing death casualties into a computation of possible advantages derived from bonus payments. He too, however, winds up with an indirect protest against Lord Cranborne's atrociously unfair principle of deducting from the amount of each officer's claim the increased pay he may have drawn for serving the State with increased responsibility in a higher grade, "after the grant of compensation for his loss of bonus on retirement has been virtually conceded." It will thus be seen that the whole structure of evasion so cleverly set up by Lord Cranborne falls to pieces at the first touch of honest criticism. In the minutes from which we have been quoting one common recognition of the scant justice done, under his Lordship's instructions, to a body of officers asking to be reimbursed for losses caused by the action of the English Government makes itself heard beyond mistake.

The Ministerial defeat on Sir F. Goldsmid's motion, aimed against the new Engineering College at Cooper's-hill, shows the almost hopelessness of legislating for India on principles that may seem to clash with party or class interests at home. Nothing could have better served the ends of statesmanlike administration in India than the general scheme of the new College. Given a great want of duly qualified men for the ever-growing needs of the Indian Public Works Department, and a low standard of engineering proficiency in the existing English schools, what better plan could have been adopted than a College where young men, selected by world-wide competition, should go through a searching probation of two or three years, before they were finally enrolled in a service demanding trained skill of the very highest order, to say nothing of the special discipline needed for official work in a country like India? Sir F. Goldsmid and his supporters however protested on Friday against such a plan with a good deal more warmth than logic. They denounced it as a departure from the principle of open competition, as if a course of training within the College affected in any way the principle on which candidates are to gain their entrance into the same. What real difference of principle is there between selecting candidates by open competition at the first or the last stage of the sifting process? Has anyone ever complained of the later stages in the examination of candidates for the Indian Civil Service as being in breach of the competitive principle, because in those stages no fresh candidates are admitted from the outside public? The only difference in the two cases is one of practical detail, which hardly tells in favour of the Civil Service. There was more ground perhaps for Mr. Fawcett's argument that the recent dearth of qualified civil engineers for Indian service was due to the small pay hitherto offered them at the outset. Against this however may be set the fact that even of the competing candidates a very small proportion reached the moderate standard then set up, thirteen for instance passing out of seventy; while competent judges have repeatedly affirmed the inadequacy of any existing institution for training civil engineers in these islands. It is only by a kind of fluke that English engineers ever work their way to scientific excellence; and we want for India a system in which excellence shall prove the rule.

Other speakers made groundless attacks on the India Office for excluding the natives of India from appointments on the public works of their own country. It was in vain for Mr. Grant Duff to remind them that in Roorkee India possesses a first-rate college where native students are "paid for coming to be trained as civil engineers." His assailants at once shifted their point of attack, and accused the Indian Government of keeping natives out of the very posts for which they had qualified themselves. It is refreshing to turn from these idle carpings to Dr. Lyon Playfair's frank avowal of his belief that the new college, instead of unfairly competing with older rivals, would tend to raise the general standard of scientific training throughout England.

We presume that the Government will not take much to heart the issue of a motion which the proposer himself would not stay to see carried, and which was only carried by a very small majority. All that has been decreed is that young men, otherwise qualified for service in India as civil engineers, "ought not to be excluded from such service by reason of their not having been educated at a Government College." We have small fear that a resolution, which virtually means no more than that young men of special talent should not be obliged to pass more than a term or two at Cooper's-hill, will hinder the carrying out of a well-considered scheme for ensuring India a regular supply of thoroughly trained engineers.

We have been requested to inform those concerned that a meeting of retired officers will be held on Monday next, at two P.M., at No. 55, Parliament-street, to consider the proper measures for bringing forward their claims to Bonus Compensation.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

TUESDAY, March 7, 1871.

TWO-LEGGED WOLVES.

A correspondent of the Field expresses grave doubts as to the truth of the many stories told about the ravages of wolves and other wild beasts in India. Referring to the cleverness of the Indian wolf in carrying off children by night from the side of their own mothers lying asleep in the heart of a populous village, he remarks on the curious facts that the mother herself is never by any chance hurt on these occasions, that no trace of the poor infant is ever found, that the victim is usually a girl, and that the wolves have an especial fondness for the children of Rajpoot families. In spite of the havoc these wolves appear to do, the number of those killed and brought in for the sake of a Government reward is unaccountably small. From all this the writer infers that some at least of the ill-fated children have been put out of the way by two-legged wolves. It is well known that the Thakoors and some other Rajpoot tribes are given to murdering their female children for fear of the social slur attaching to the possession of unmarried daughters, or of daughters married to men of a lower caste. If even in England many deaths, especially of young children, occur under very suspicious circumstances, or escape all notice on the part of prying neighbours, it is easy to imagine the extent to which child-murder can be carried on with impunity, in a country where a few thousand Englishmen have to rule a hundred and fifty millions of natives by methods obviously unequal to their apparent ends. We have to reach the recesses of native feeling by means chiefly of native underlings who can seldom enter into the spirit of their alien employers. It is a curious fact, long since pointed out by writers in India, that the "bangles" so generally worn by native children never turn up again after the disappearance of their wearers. We are not aware that wolves have a weakness for silver ornaments. The writer in the Field has hit upon one clue to the reading of a chronic mystery. But there is another which he has failed to notice. He observes that the Kanjars, a wandering tribe of low caste natives answering to our gypsies, make little by hunting wolves, on the plea that there are none to hunt. Is it unlikely that these same Kanjars are often themselves the wolves, a solution which would account for the disappearance both of babes and bangles? The idea at any rate was mooted some twenty years ago by Captain Hutton of the Bengal Army, in an essay contributed to Saunders's Magazine on the subject, if we remember rightly, of the "wild boys" who have now and then been caught or seen in Indian jungles. It was his opinion that if any such were-wolves had a real existence, they were probably children whom these Kanjars had stolen for the sake of their ornaments, and left to take their chance of living or dying in the woods. We should be sorry to take for granted a tithe of the evil deeds imputed by popular report to these and other tribes of wandering outcasts. But it is certain that kidnapping and child-murder are practices by no means rare in India, nor greatly shocking to the native Indian mind; while our efforts at suppressing these sort of crimes are continually baffled by the ignorance, real or assumed, of the native police. It is not the bangles only that are sold on such occasions: the children themselves would sometimes be included in the bargain.

A WISE REFORM.

The recent order by the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, "that all native judicial officers shall, in criminal trials, take down the evidence of witnesses in their own handwriting in full," has put a stop to a serious evil which, for a series of years, has been a blot on the administration of justice in the Local Courts of India. No one, not conversant with those Courts, and the character of the ministerial officers employed in them, can realize the immense power for evil which the system, which hitherto obtained, of making memoranda of depositions after they had been taken, placed in the hands of those officers. The records of appeals in criminal cases contain numerous instances of distinct denials by suitors as to the correctness of the evidence recorded; but such denials have been treated as aspersions upon the character of the Lower Courts, and, therefore, disregarded. To the ministerial officers the system afforded immense pecuniary advantage. Not a deposition was taken for which the recording officer did not demand a fee, to the payment of which no objection was made. It was supposed that sufficient check to dishonesty was provided by taking depositions in the presence of the hazoor, though not within his hearing; and when no objections were raised to the evidence recorded, it was further supposed that the record was substantially correct. But the presiding officers omitted to take into consideration that the class of suitors and witnesses before them, in criminal suits, stood too much in awe of the recording officer, of whose power they had too much reason to be satisfied to charge him with wilful falsification. His position, and the fact of his being in the presence of the hazoor while taking down the evidence, was prima facie guarantee that he had faithfully recorded the evidence given. It has not unfrequently happened that evidence so taken has been of so unsatisfactory a nature as to render arrival at the truth impossible. Such a result was simply that which was deliberately contemplated.

We fail to see why the recent order applies only to native judicial officers. The evil is general, and so should the remedy be. The fact that the presiding officer is an European is no guarantee that evidence taken in the manner described in the order is more trustworthy than evidence taken in a Court presided over by a native. The same class of ministerial officers are employed in both Courts, and the European officer is as likely as the native officer is to be deceived. In criminal cases especially, which affect the lives and liberties of people, nothing should be taken for granted. The interests at stake are too important, and only in India could the objectionable practice now stopped have been permitted to continue for so many generations of our rule.

We also fail to understand the latter portion of the order which lays down "that should they," the judicial officers, "be prevented by any sufficient reasons from taking down the evidence of any witness, in such case they shall record the reason of their inability to do so, and shall cause the evidence to be taken down in writing, from their dictation in open Court." The italics are ours. We do not see how if "they are prevented from taking down the evidence," they can "cause it to be taken down in writing, from their dictation." This reminds us of the witness who stated that "he did not mean to say that A had struck B, but he meant to say that B had been struck by A."

INDIAN REVENUE RETURNS.

A comparison of the published returns of Indian revenue and expenditure for eight months of 1870, with the corresponding months in the previous year, proves that Mr. Grant Duff was not too sanguine in his recent estimate of probable surplus on the whole year ending with the last day of the present month. Beginning with the receipts, we find in the land revenue for the months in question a gain of nearly half-a-million as compared with the year before. This, no doubt, is partly due to revised assessments; but the absence of drought and such like conditions must also be taken into account. It is fortunate in this respect that Rajpootana, which suffered by far the worst from the famine of 1869, contributes nothing—except for British Ajmere and Mairwarra—to the land revenue of British India; else Mr. Grant Duff's allusion to the absence of calamities like the Orissa famine would have lost all semblance of even literal truth, in view of the million or so who perished in native States alone during that very year. Nor have the border districts of Sindh escaped the suffering which drought, followed by flights of locusts, was sure to engender.

The Excise receipts for the eight months amounted to £1,540,135, or nearly £108,000 more than in 1869. The Customs show an increase of £176,000 on the million and a-half of the previous year. A total of little more than three millions on Customs and Excise together offers a striking contrast to the 43 millions obtained from those sources in Great Britain, a contrast which ought to warn us against making rash experiments with the fiscal resources of India. The mainstay of Indian finance must still be land revenue. On Assessed Taxes the entire yield was £1,208,188, giving an increase of £673,379 on the former year. If an Income-tax of 7½d. in the pound can produce no more than two millions a-year, would it not be the wisest policy to drop altogether, instead of lightening, an impost which can never be collected with any approach to fairness in a country where almost every native official lives and fattens as a thing of course on bribes?

The Salt-tax brought in nearly four millions sterling, a difference of more than £337,000 to the good. If this tax were judiciously lowered all round to one uniform level, we believe that a largely increased consumption would far more than compensate for the reduced charge per maund. As a correspondent elsewhere reminds us, a good deal of the mortality among cattle and of the havoc caused by disease among men may be traced to the influence of high prices in diminishing the consumption of salt among the poor. Owing to the transfer of certain items from the head of Stamps to that of Law and Justice, the decrease of nine hundred thousand pounds on the one side is balanced by an increase of £936,000 on the other. On the Post-office and Telegraph receipts there was a total gain of more than £153,000, against a loss of £86,000 on the Mint, £132,000 on Miscellaneous Items, and £24,000 on Forest Revenue. There was a small decrease in receipts from the Army and Public Works Ordinary, and a large one of £181,000 on "Railway Exchange Gain." Altogether the returns show a balance of a million and a-half on the right side. We may also note that the receipts from Opium were only less by £2,860 than the £5,212,739 collected in the same period of 1869. After all the forebodings which Sir R. Temple shared with most of his neighbours, this rate of decrease points to a large gain upon the original estimates for the whole year.

Under the head of Expenditure again we find an actual saving of more than a million and a-half. The great bulk of this must of course be set down to the reduced outlay on Public Works, which consumed in all about 2⅓ millions, including State Railways, or nearly a million and a-half less than in the previous year. On the Army there was also a saving of £337,568. The next largest saving was one of £100,941 on the Police, a saving effected by doing away with a whole class of deputy-inspectors. On the policy of this retrenchment from a total charge of about a million and a-half for eight months, opinions are still divided. A sum of £92,539 was also saved on Political Agencies, and one of £35,116 on Telegraphs. Opium on the other hand shows an additional outlay of £200,722, Law and Justice of £85,303, the Spirit Excise of £71,385, and the Forest Department of £69,483. The outlay on Stationery and Printing was reduced by nearly £17,000, that on Education by about £28,000, and that on the Marine by £34,000. The Medical Services on the other hand cost £22,000 more, the charge for Superannuation Allowances rose from £459,956 to £488,188, and the £847,000 spent on native State-pensioners shows an increase of more than £33,000. Finally on Miscellaneous Items there was an increased outlay of £81,000.

In comparing outlay with receipts on particular items, we are glad to see the Post-office yielding a clear surplus of £150,000 on the eight months under review. The Telegraph Department on the other hand is still some way from self-supporting, although the increase in its income and the reduction in its outlay together equalled a hundred and twenty thousand pounds, leaving a balance against it of only £30,000. It cost more than a million and a half to collect rather less than 5¼ millions from opium, whereas a salt revenue of nearly four millions was collected at a cost of only £244,144. The only thing to say in favour of the income-tax is that its collection cost no more than £28,769. It took £339,000—a sum proportionally much larger—to collect a Customs and Excise revenue of less than 3¼ millions. This proportion of about 9 per cent. rises to about 15 per cent. in the case of the land-revenue; the charge for collecting 10½ millions being close upon a million and a-half. In the case of opium the proportion comes very near to 30 per cent.

INDIAN FINANCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

Sir,—With reference to your leading article on Indian Finance in your paper of the 28th ult., I would suggest three questions to be put before the Committee for solution:—

Firstly. Cannot a large revenue be obtained in India without difficulty by an excise on tobacco? Four or five years ago the Indian Government rejected the proposal, but on what, in my humble opinion, were insufficient grounds. Any financier who may be acquainted with the French or any other Continental revenue system, will easily be able to prove the practicability of levying a tax on tobacco. It must be remembered, first, that tobacco is exceedingly cheap in India, and that even the poor unskilled labourer can afford to pay double its present price; and, secondly, that the consumption is enormous, and that a moderate excise would yield a large revenue.

Secondly. Cannot a stamp-duty be imposed on probates, legacies, and successions?

With reference to landed property, Nuzzaranah, or Succession Tax is entirely in accordance with native ideas. With reference to personal property the heirs to such would, no doubt, try to conceal its existence, but the authorities at Somerset-house could instruct our Indian financiers how to levy successfully a moderate tax. The laws of inheritance which subdivide property among heirs check its concealment. It would not be difficult to learn approximately the amount of property inherited. District officers have for long been accustomed to ascertain the amount of lost treasure found. Gold and silver is being constantly dug up in various parts of India, and the discoverers are apt to quarrel among themselves in the division of the treasure.

Thirdly. Is it possible to reduce the Salt Tax?

This tax, when levied in moderation, is justifiable, but its present weight is the greatest disgrace to the Indian Government. Medical and other official reports have proved that the deaths of tens of thousands of cattle must be chiefly attributed to want of salt, and it is believed that many diseases in India among human beings are intensified in violence owing to the high price of salt. In the diet of the poorest classes the salt consumed is inferior in quality and deficient in quantity.—Yours faithfully, T.

Returns.—The monthly "Return of Actual Numbers in India" is to be discontinued. Adjutant-general's circular, No. 52, dated Poona, Aug. 24, 1869, to be corrected accordingly.

Spirit of the Indian Press.

THE NEW BUREAU.

The Englishman, examining the official programme of the new Department of Trade and Agriculture, can find nothing to justify the description given by the Observer. Were the Department, except in special cases, to interfere directly in agriculture, mining, metallurgy, and similar pursuits, it would not only be courting failure, but departing from the proper functions of the Government, of which, after all, it will form a branch. But there is no ground for supposing that it is intended to do anything of the sort. There is, however, no reason why it should not directly stimulate the development of the material resources of the country, including even the "manufacture of iron rails" and the "production of petroleum," by its dealings with private enterprise; and no one who knows how much progress in this direction has been retarded by the policy or no policy of existing Departments will be likely to contend that it has not here a fair field before it. The criticism of the Observer and of the press generally seems to us to ignore one very important advantage, which will be secured by the creation of the new Department. India will have, what she has not had before—a Department whose interest it will be to treat all questions connected with the material development of the country on their merits, and which will, at the same time, possess ample powers to adopt in all such questions whatever course of action may appear to it best calculated to promote that object. The policy of the new bureau will be progress, and its reputation will entirely depend upon its success in aiding progress. With such a role marked out for it, private enterprise will be its natural ally, and will approach it with a confidence that has hitherto been wanting. The Departments that have previously had to deal with the questions about to be transferred to the new bureau, have not only felt no special interest in them, but have not unfrequently looked upon them as irksome and inconvenient interruptions of the even tenor of their way. If latterly they could not altogether neglect them, it was rather in obedience to external pressure than to an inward conviction of their importance; while the decisions arrived at regarding them have been the outcome of conflicting feelings. All this will now be changed, and this change alone will be a great gain. One of the most important objects of the Department will, no doubt, be the collection and utilisation of statistics; and we must say we do not believe it can efficiently discharge this function without special machinery and a considerable increase of existing expenditure. "It is to Arthur Young, Laveleye, and other similar writers," says the Observer, "that we owe what we know of agriculture in Europe, and till men of the same class are to be found in India, there will really be no statistics to collect. If the State is to exercise any beneficial influence on Indian agriculture, it will not be by the creation of new Secretariat Offices, but by employing a certain number of skilled scientific agents, who must be willing to spend months, if not years, in patient local study, before they can hope to have anything to teach." We agree with our contemporary that we can have no useful statistics without employing carefully trained inquirers to collect them. But this is no reason why we should not have a "new Secretariat Office," whose special province it should be, among other things, to direct such inquiries, and apply the information obtained.

THE CIVIL SERVANTS OF MADRAS AND BOMBAY.

The Madras Times thinks it may fairly be looked upon as a national benefit if the present move on the part of the Madras and Bombay civilians should result in causing the Supreme Government to cast a critical eye on her Majesty's servants resident out of Bengal, the N. W. Provinces, and the Punjab. It may be invidious to name individuals, but we think in proof of the truth of what we have said, we shall be justified in pointing out a man here and there in the Presidencies now left out in the cold, eminently qualified to serve Government in any capacity no matter how important the duties entrusted to him. In Madras, we have Messrs. Ellis and Holloway, both men of varied acquirements, sound scholars, good writers, first rate speakers, men of first class talent, undoubtedly two of the best men of their day in India—and to go no further than the Secretariat, Mr. Stokes, a young but most excellent public servant, with the peculiar gift, as we are credibly informed, of getting at the point of a subject rapidly, and mastering details, however complicated and difficult, with wonderful rapidity and accuracy. There is also Mr. Dalyell, the Friend of India's pet, who has done good service, and shown himself to be an excellent man of business, as well as a sound writer and thinker. Nor must we omit when speaking of Presidency officials to mention the name of Mr. Grose, who is on all hands allowed to be one of the most efficient men of his day, with a remarkable head for figures, and a capacity for performing work which few men can equal. Then in the Mofussil, Madras can point to such men as Messrs. Morris, Minchin, Carmichael, Puckle, Lilly, McLean, and Cumming as being well worthy to represent her, and there are no doubt many more among the juniors who would be found up to the mark in any position which they might be called on to occupy. Turning to the sister presidency of Bombay, we have no hesitation in saying that Messrs. Newton, Ravenscroft, Hope, Melvill, Peile, West and Crawford, are men who have few superiors in India. The first has always been considered a first rate man. The second as is well known brought himself into notice by quelling a dangerous riot at Surat which might have led to the most serious consequences with a mere handful of men, displaying great intrepidity and tact, and since he has been in the Bombay Secretariat has shown himself to be an excellent man of business. The next four are all finished scholars and men of talent, Mr. Melvill especially being one of the most talented men who has landed in India for many a year. As regards Mr. Crawford, "the Haussman of Bombay," it is we should think unnecessary for us to say anything. He has proved himself so good as an administrator that we suspect even his worst enemy can hardly have the effrontery to deny his claim to eminence among the civilians of India. Why, then, we ask, should these men and men like them, of whom doubtless there are many unknown to us, never have a chance of climbing into the positions of high trust, high pay, and great distinction which the Bombay and Madras Civilians enumerate in their petitions? If they may justly be aggrieved to think, that because fate has cast their lot out of Bengal, neither natural talent, nor consummate scholarship, nor administrative ability of the highest order can avail them anything—the public in our opinion have no less reason to be dissatisfied that the services of such men are not availed of where most required. We trust, therefore, that the press of India will be unanimous in supporting the petitions of Madras and Bombay, and that the civilians, if rebuffed in Calcutta, will lay their complaint before the authorities at home.

NATIVE ADMINISTRATORS.

The Times of India holds that if Sir Dinkur Rao is still in working order and of willing mind, there are numerous high and confidential employments in which the Government of India might utilise, for imperial purposes, his special abilities and ripe experience. Might he not in various ways strengthen the political agency in Rajpootana, thereby effecting more in a year or two than can be gained by ten durbars? In connection with native states which are somewhat more civilised than Marwar, would not Sir Dinkur Rao be the man to lead them, to hasten slowly but surely, in applying so much as is practicable of such sage counsel as that embodied in the "New Year Letter" of the Maharajah Satyapriya which appeared in our colums of Wednesday last? Possibly, he scarcely retains sufficient activity for duties of the kind indicated; and we point in these directions rather by way of reminder. The invaluable service of interpreting to native rulers just so much as is practicable for them, of our better systems of administration and juster rule, can best be performed by their own countrymen, when Hindoo or Mussulman agents can be selected of thoroughly well trained minds and unmistakable weight of character. Sir Dinkur Rao has arrived at that age when his mellowed intellect and well-tested experience would be of most service in the Council Chamber—not the place of debate and talk, but that of free consultation and firm decision. It was rumoured some few weeks since that His Excellency Lord Mayo desired to obtain the services of some native gentlemen in the Executive Council. Such a bold acting up to many lofty professions would be an innovation likely to cause no little flutter amongst officials of high and low degree, as well as amongst some of the new-official public who, in matters political, seem to regard the people of this country much in the same way as if they were unkempt aborigines. Lord Mayo scarcely belongs to the rank of statesmen strong enough to defy the great majority of the administrators on whose zealous aid he is necessarily dependent; so that we need scarcely expect to see any result follow the rumour to which we have referred, but if there were an actively sincere desire to utilise the best and most practical Indian wisdom for the imperial service, then Sir Dinkur Rao may be taken as a fair type of certain invaluable resources as yet almost undrawn upon. The appointment of Sirdars and Princes to seats in our talking (i. e., Legislative) Councils is not without its use; but there is more of garnish than work in this expedient. And, as very properly pointed out in the Calcutta petition, the presence in our "parliaments" of chiefs from "foreign" territories serves as excuse or occasion for the continued exclusion of more competent and suitable native representatives who are British subjects. But the question before us is that of utilising superior native talent in executive work; and we are glad that the casual visit of Sir Dinkur Rao to the Deccan has given us fair opportunity to refer to a neglected topic, one of vital significance to our Imperial rule.

Wife Wanted.—A daily advertising paper just started in Calcutta has the following advertisement:—"A gentleman, aged thirty-seven, of Christian principles, highly respected, good appearance, and healthy, holding an important appointment, and having early prospects of yet higher distinction, would be happy to correspond with any lady (not a widow, except young) who would appreciate a really good husband. This advertisement being genuine, the advertiser will afford the utmost facility for any inquiry, through the agency of 'Alpha.' All letters to be sent to the Commission and Finance Agency's office, to the address of 'Alpha.'"

STATION TALK.

Lucknow, Jan. 24.—The Maharajah of Puttiala passed through Cawnpore on the 22nd inst. for Calcutta, to take his seat in the Legislative Council; though the Maharajah did not stay more than ten minutes at Cawnpore, the usual salute was fired for his Highness. It is reported that General Barrow, Chief Commissioner, has gone out on tour towards Fyzabad, but will return at an early date. The amateurs of C Battery 8th Brigade Royal Artillery have issued a programme announcing a theatrical performance in Mahomed Bagh on the evening of the 26th current, under the special patronage of Colonel E. H. Fisher, R.A., and the officers of the Royal Artillery, when will be produced the celebrated romantic drama, in two acts, by Mr. G. Alwar, entitled The Robbers of the Rhine; to be followed by a grand display of acrobatics, feats of strength, agility, &c., by Messrs. Cooper and Beckingham; to conclude with the screaming farce in one act, by Lord Glengall, entitled the Irish Tutor on New Lights. Owing to the darkness of the nights the thieves have begun their nocturnal exploits, and many thefts have recently taken place; I am of opinion that it is preposterous for peelers to be bellowing about in their rounds, they should quietly patrol the streets, as otherwise they warn the thieves that they are coming in their direction, and thus give them an opportunity of concealing themselves and evading detection. Before Mr. Robert Davies, the now Lieutenant Governor of the Punjab, left this, he gave a splendid testimonial to Moonshee Ram Pershad of the Hoosainabad endowment, saying "that he was highly pleased with the Moonshee's admirable arrangements, and that he had rendered valuable assistance to the Lucknow authorities." The Moonshee ought to be proud in being in possession of such a document, there is not the least doubt that he is a favourite with all the officials in Oude, who are in every respect perfectly satisfied with him, and he is popular among all classes of the community. The weather is still lovely.

Dugshai, Jan. 26.—A company of H.M.'s 85th K.L.I. under the command of Captain Hancock, marched out of Solon at 7.30 A.M. to complete their course of musketry practice. The 85th, by the way, have an excellent band, which plays at the stand twice a week. During the early part of the month we had one or two severe storms. All the bungalows occupied by the officers of the 85th regiment are undergoing thorough repair in consequence; complaints of leakages and outhouses tumbling down are numerous and no doubt provoking to a degree. On dit that Mr. J. Wheeler, Sub-Engineer, who left the station in October last on two years' medical certificate to England, is to be here by the 20th proximo. The prospect of a speedy promotion, it is stated, has induced him to cancel his leave and thus forego the pleasure of a trip to England.

Lukhimpore, Jan. 29.—General Barrow paid us a visit very recently. He came in on the morning of the 23rd instant, and inspected the Deputy-Commissioner's office the same evening. The next morning (24th) he inspected the jail, the dispensary, and the school-house, and was, on the whole, satisfied. He left this on Wednesday. The Commissioner of the Seetapore Division, Lieutenant Colonel Thompson, came in on the 27th, and inspected the jail and dispensary in the morning, and the office of the Deputy-Commissioner in the evening. Yesterday, too, he inspected the same office, and was, on the whole, satisfied. Mr. McMinn, Settlement Officer, and Mr. Williams, Assistant Settlement Officer, are still out on tour. Weather delightfully cool; prospect of crops brilliant.

Allahabad, Jan. 29:—The 104th arrived here some days ago, and are encamped near the new barracks; three companies went to Jubbulpore, but have returned, or are about to return, and will be quartered in the lines near the Royal Artillery. As soon as the regiment is well settled down it will be inspected by the general, and then I suppose a few field days will commence, or sham fights, after the fashion adopted by General Travers at Meerut; as our general is fully as fond of and up to such fun as any officer in her Majesty's service. By-the-bye Dinapore is to be head-quarters of this division from February, why or wherefore, deponent sayeth not. I am afraid Allahabad is not rising in importance as it deserves. The weather is all that could be wished; perhaps a little too cold at times; but very pleasant when a high wind does not prevail and kick up a dust, which it does rather more frequently than is pleasant, but upon the whole we have had a very cold season, and most people are the better for it, though colds and coughs with slight fevers are rather prevalent. There is no news of any importance to chronicle; travellers by railway arrive from the North and go down via Jubbulpore daily, bound for old England; they seem to prefer this route to that via Calcutta. Colonel J. Young, R. A., who has been appointed to command the Royal Artillery of the Saugor Division, was about to leave for Jubbulpore, when a telegram arrived and postponed his departure from among us. Colonel S. Stallard, R.A., is going to Ferozepore to command the Royal Artillery at that station, but he will not join for some days yet, I am glad to say. He will be much missed from our social circles. I am sorry to say that crime is rather common here, especially in the shape of petty thefts by domestic servants, who, I have no doubt, find the numerous box-wallas of great assistance in disposing of their illicit gains. There have also been some cases of murder, and "found dead" under suspicious circumstances, in and about the station; from all which I conclude that Allahabad is not wanting in various evil-disposed persons, who are always on the look out for something to "turn up."—Delhi Gazette Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

Sir Salar Jung.—It is said that Sir Salar Jung is about to proceed to England, to personally thank her Majesty for the decoration he has lately received.

Assam.—There was a shock of earthquake felt at Gowhatty, in Assam, on the night of the 27th January, and again on the 30th. The shock on this side of India was on the 31st.

Rev. Dr. Jardine.—We learn that the Rev. Robert Jardine will succeed the late Dr. Ogilvie as Principal of the General Assembly's Institution, Calcutta. Mr. Jardine is well known in Bombay as an able scholar and zealous educationist.—Indian Reformer, Feb. 6.

Sir W. Grey.—A meeting of the native inhabitants of Calcutta and the suburbs was to be held on the 11th Feb., for the purpose of considering the propriety of testifying their appreciation of the public career of Sir William Grey.

General Fytche.—General and Mrs. Fytche leave Burmah for England (via Calcutta) in March, the Chief Commissioner possibly returning in the cold weather. Colonel Ardagh will, it is believed, act for General Fytche during his absence.

Delhi.—It is reported that General Norman has recommended that the Selimghur outwork should be given up, with a view to reduce the extent of the line of defence at Delhi. Selimghur could easily be blown into the air.

Commercial.—The telegrams announcing the capitulation of Paris created an immediate change in the general tone of the Calcutta market. Exports came into sudden demand, and for a while cotton shot up a rupee.

Stud Department.—Lieut.-Colonel Sir C. W. D'Oyley, Deputy Superintendent of Studs, has, we learn from the Englishman, been appointed to officiate as Superintendent of Studs during the absence on furlough of Major J. K. Cowper.

Sir W. Muir.—On the 3rd Feb. Sir William Muir, Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, met with an accident, which might have been serious; his horse came down with him, and he was thrown upon his head. A few bad scratches were, however, the only injuries received.

Administrative.—A committee is about to sit at Lahore, Mr. Justice Boulnois president, to arrange for the separation of judicial and executive functions throughout all the districts of the Punjab. Mr. Forsyth is to be a member. The changes which the scheme will involve will not be made at any enhanced cost.

Uncovenanted Services.—We learn from the Indian Reformer that the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal has recommended to the Government of India an application made by uncovenanted deputy magistrates and deputy collectors for an increase to their pay and allowances.

A New Paper.—We have received the first number of a new Calcutta weekly, called The Observer. It is ably written, finely printed, and promises to rank high in the Indian press. We praise it all the more readily because we disagree with its views on the present war, which we consider superficial and unsound.—Bombay Gazette.

Fisheries.—The Gazette of India contains a suggestion by Dr. Day, founded on his recent investigations in various salmon rivers of England and Wales, for the construction of passes, gaps or fish-ladders, by which the migratory species may be able to ascend to deposit their ova in rivers obstructed by anicuts.

Financial.—In confirming the appointment of Mr. Westland to the post of Under-Secretary to the Government of India, in the Financial Department, as a permanent measure, the Supreme Government is said to have observed that that has been done pending the result of a reference made to the Secretary of State, on the subject of reducing the status of all the Under Secretaries to the India Government, a subject which has been pending the consideration of the Supreme Government for some time past.

Educational.—The Government of the N. W. Provinces has outshone all others in the absurdity of its educational arrangements. The first effect of the graded system there has been to place Mr. Constable, who till the other day was valued at Rs. 500 a month, over the heads of all the Inspectors and Principals who are his seniors. At one leap he has been promoted to a salary of Rs. 1,250, rising to Rs. 1,500. We do not grudge him his good fortune, but we should like Sir W. Muir or Mr. Kempson to tell us what the services are by which he has earned so splendid an acknowledgment, and we should advise less distinguished men (such as Mr. Griffith, who has the misfortune to be one of the first of Sanscrit scholars) to tread in his footsteps.—Indian Public Opinion, Jan. 31.

CIVILIANS ON LEAVE.—On the 31st December last, out of a total of 592 civilians on the Bengal establishment, 123 were absent on furlough on special leave. Of these, seven were employed under the Government of India, fifty-six in the Lower Provinces of Bengal, thirty-seven in the North-Western Provinces, fifteen in the Punjab, three in Oude, and five in the Central Provinces.

THE QUEEN AND THE BABOO.—The Indian Reformer mentions as "a fresh evidence of the kindly interest taken by our beloved Sovereign in her Indian subjects," that her Majesty has been pleased to give expression, through her Private Secretary, Colonel Ponsonby, to her satisfaction at the success which has attended the efforts of Baboo Keshub Chunder Sen, on behalf of his countrymen in India, in connection with the Indian Reform Association.

SUICIDE AMONG INDIAN COOLIES.—The Secretary of State has drawn the attention of the Government of India to the frequency of suicide among Indian labourers in the Mauritius, and asks whether the same tendency is observed in India among the classes from whom the coolies are recruited. The average annual number of suicides in England is 65 to 1,000,000 persons living; in the Mauritius the average is 270. In the absence of mortuary statistics and reliable police returns, it is difficult, remarks the Observer, to see how the information sought for is to be obtained,

SUCH IS FAME.—"The late Dr. Ogilvie," writes a correspondent of the Friend of India, "was present three years ago at the complimentary dinner given to Dr. McLeod by Sir John Lawrence, and in the course of the evening Sir John went up to the retiring doctor and said—'So, Dr. Ogilvie, you have just come to India,' evidently taking him to be one of the visiting party. 'I have been in India, Sir John,' the doctor replied, 'twenty-three years.' And yet, after so long a time, and in so prominent a position Sir John Lawrence did not know his guest by name."

TRADE AND NAVIGATION.—The official returns of the trade and navigation of British India for the seven months ended the 31st October last, as compared with the corresponding period of last year, show a grand total of imports of the value of Rs. 19,74,22,093, against Rs. 17,76,14,505, and of exports of Rs. 32,58,31,965, against Rs. 31,17,36,173. The imports of treasure for the same period amounted to Rs. 3,40,23,632, against Rs. 8,30,99,086, and the exports to Rs. 1,45,50,212, against Rs. 59,06,456. Import duty to the amount of Rs. 2,50,53,331, was collected, against Rs. 2,33,35,799 and export duty to the amount of Rs. 31,04,362, against Rs. 21,82,159.

THE "WAHABEES."—The trial of the Wahabee prisoner, Moulvie Ameeruddeen, commenced on Saturday, Feb. 4, at Calcutta, before the officiating Chief Justice and Mr. Justice Bayley. It was anticipated that the case would last three or four days. The greater part of Saturday was devoted to comments upon the evidence by the prisoner's counsel.—Arrangements being complete for bringing to trial the leading Wahabee conspirators in Lower Bengal, the Government has, says the Observer, discharged from custody all the inferior agents, who had been confined under Regulation III. of 1818, till the clues in the hands of the police could be traced up to the North-West Frontier.

AFGHANISTAN.—It is not improbable, the Pioneer considers, that Yakoob Khan met with foul play on his way, a prisoner, to Cabul. The Governor of Khelat i-Ghilzie, it is true, wrote word that as the escort was on its way "it was attacked by the advance guard of Yakoob Khan, but that the Cabul troops defeated them and the rebellious Sirdar took to flight;" but another letter has since reached the Ameer in which it is said that a detachment of cavalry from the Cabul army "attacked Yakoob Khan." The "rebellious Sirdar," however, managed to escape, and will probably some day give a true account of what at present looks like a clumsy attempt to get rid of him.

NATIVE THEORIES OF EARTHQUAKES.—There are various theories of the cause of earthquakes. By a Surat paper we are informed that the uneducated Hindoos there "believe that when the world becomes sinful, the Shes Nag (a kind of serpent), on whom the world stands, turns his side, and hence such shocks of earthquakes are felt. A correspondent at Gowhatty, in Assam, mentions another popular notion:—"At about eleven P.M. on Friday last we were rudely roused from sleep by a heavy shock of earthquake. It seemed as if a giant had jumped on my bungalow, hence the belief among the natives in Assam that earthquakes are caused by the periodical leaps of mountain gods from one mountain to another."

BENGAL SOCIAL SCIENCE ASSOCIATION.—The annual meeting of the Social Science Association was held yesterday (Feb. 2) at the Town Hall. The number of European and Native gentlemen present on the occasion was unusually large. Many were attracted, no doubt, by the presence of the Viceroy, the Lieutenant-Governor, and the Bishop of Calcutta. We saw also the youthful Maharajah of Puttialah. Dr. Ewart, the president, read an able paper, in which he discussed Professor Huxley's opinions on the Doctrine of Life, and urged the necessity of introducing the physical sciences into the curriculum of the entrance examinations of the Calcutta University. Mr. Clarke then read his paper on the Drainage of Calcutta, which was illustrated by diagrams. His Excellency the Viceroy gracefully wound up the proceedings of the meeting by moving a vote of thanks to Dr. Ewart and Mr. Clarke, and commending the high objects of the Association.—Indian Reformer.

DEMAND FOR A ROYAL COMMISSION.—A petition for a Royal commission is being circulated in Calcutta and we believe also in Bombay and Madras. It is an indictment of Indian Administration. It condemns the Financial Department, of course. It demands that Public Works shall only be carried into effect when absolutely needed for some special purpose, unless the ordinary revenue of the country is sufficient to defray the cost. It condemns the system of obtaining stores from England. It asks that a return of expenditure for Indian purposes in England shall be made on the same principle as if the money was spent in India. It condemns the Income-tax. It condemns Simla, or at least Government at Simla for India. It claims that the army of India should be placed under one Commander-in-Chief, instead of one for each Presidency. It objects (incidentally) to civil appointments being given to military officers.

PROTECTION OF THE NORTH EASTERN FRONTIER.—At the meeting of the Landholders' Commercial Association, held at Calcutta on the 6th Feb., and numerously attended, the following resolutions were unanimously passed:—"That a memorial be addressed to the Government of India, referring to the previous correspondence with the Government of Bengal, on the subject of the former Looshai raids in the province of Cachar, and praying for permanent protection by Government for the future. Also begging for information with respect to the steps proposed to be taken to secure this object. That the proprietors of tea estates in Cachar be invited by the Secretary of the Association to send him returns of the loss sustained on their gardens by the present raid, in coolies, bungalows, stores and other property, with a view to a claim being instituted against Government for the recovery of such loss, the costs of any proceedings necessary for this purpose to be borne by the Association."

THE TELEGRAPH TARIFF.—We have received a notice that the Indian Telegraph Companies in England have coalesced and nearly doubled their charge for messages to India, whilst no alteration has been made from this side. We understand that this has been done without the knowledge of the Government of India, which still holds full power, at least over one of the lines, and we hope that this arrangement will not be accepted by it. We believe this to be a conspiracy against the public and in direct opposition to the Convention of Vienna. If the Government of India resists this monstrous proceeding, and retains its influence over the Turkish lines, the European conspiracy will soon be broken up, or the one line which maintains the lower rates will be certain of securing the whole business of India, or as much work as the line can perform. We are as yet rather in ignorance of the reasons of this movement, and no information has been vouchsafed to the Government here; all has been done in secrecy in England, and we trust, therefore it will be defeated.—Englishman.

SNAKE-POISON.—In the last number of the Indian Medical Gazette Dr. Fayrer summarises the results of his experiments on snake poison. His labours have shown that the virus of snakes kills everything, be it beast, bird, fish, or reptile; that the bite of the cobra and the ophiophagus and daboia take equal rank as the most deadly; that the fang of the krait, though not so sudden, is as sure, and that salt-water snakes are always dangerous. We further learn that warm-blooded animals are the easiest victims, that a cobra cannot kill a cobra, that the blood of animals poisoned by the colubrine snakes coagulates after death, but that of those killed by the viperidæ remains fluid. It also appears that the blood of animals killed by snakes becomes itself poisonous in a high degree, that venomous reptiles are very susceptible of other poisons than their own, and that the bodies of animals killed by snakes can be eaten with impunity. But on the all-important question of an antidote, we have learnt nothing but this—that there is no antidote. A strong constitution, ligatures, and excision still remain the only armour we have against the bite of snakes.

A GRIEVANCE IN THE PUNJAB.—Considerable dissatisfaction is being evinced in the Punjab at the return of Messrs. Wood and Young to that province as deputy commissioners. These two officers, it appears, were, when assistant-commissioners, borrowed to help in the settlements in Oude. They are now returned to the Punjab, and reinstated in the grade of their standing in the Punjab Commission. This the Punjabees in civil employ consider an injustice, or at any rate a great hardship; and the subject is, it is said, to be made the ground for a memorial to the Lieutenant-Governor. We sympathise heartily with the disappointment of the Punjab civilians, already suffering from an almost dead-lock of promotion, at finding it suddenly still further obstructed by the return of two gentlemen whom they had fondly considered fairly out of their way in Oude. The hardship certainly is considerable, but the injustice is not so clear. Messrs. Young and Wood have never ceased to belong to the Punjab, though lent to Oude. This was long since expressly decided by the Supreme Government on a reference from those of Oude and the Punjab. It is true that the loan has been a long one, and the juniors of the Punjab may naturally have hoped that it would never be repaid. Still they must not forget that they have during these years enjoyed a certain miserable acceleration of promotion, in consequence of Messrs. Young and Wood's temporary absence. They would have been worse off still if those gentlemen had never gone at all.—Pioneer.

An Old Dispute Settled.—The long-pending dispute between the late Maharajah of Kuppoorthullah and his half brother Sirdar Bikrama Singh, for their respective estates in Oude, has at last (says the Pioneer) been set at rest by the timely intervention of the late Chief Commissioner of Oude. Notwithstanding the dismissal of the Sirdar's suit in all the Courts of Oude, the Maharajah's title being unimpeachable under the Oude Estates Act, the latter consented to the arbitration of Mr. R. H. Davies. The award directs the payment to the Sirdar by the Maharajah within six months of five and a-half lakhs of rupees, to be invested by the Oude authorities in the purchase of land in the province of Oude, and to be held by the Sirdar and the heirs male of his body in proprietary right. But in the event of the Sirdar dying without heirs male of his body, the proprietary right in such land to revert unconditionally to the Maharajah of Kuppoorthullah for the time being. Mr. Davies records in the award his "warm admiration and cordial approval of the just and honourable conduct of Rajah Khuruck Singh in this transaction."

India's Defensive Forces.—The Army and Navy Gazette draws a somewhat melancholy picture of our military position in India. It insists that we could not place above 45,000 British and 30,000 native troops in the field. The majority of the first have still to be armed with breechloaders, the latter are armed with Brown Bess. Right as to the British force, the Gazette is altogether at sea in its estimate of the strength of the native army. In Bengal alone there are forty-five regiments of infantry, of which thirty are probably composed of Sikhs and North country races; and nineteen of cavalry, of which fifteen may be of the same material. Besides these, there are four Goorkah corps, and the Punjab frontier force, composed of five cavalry and four infantry regiments of Sikhs. We could furnish a contingent of 40,000, composed entirely of Sikhs, Pythans, Goorkahs, without drawing upon either Sinde or Central India. Money, not men, is the difficulty here, and by men we do not mean clodhoppers, but smart ready-made soldiers, robbers, anything you will, from and beyond our northern frontiers. Good shots, good swordsmen, broad in the chest, little given to the enjoyments of pastoral life, Rob-Roys after an Asiatic pattern. The long rifle in use among these races is good for far and hard hitting, supposing that we had no other rifle to give them.—Friend of India.

Military.—The Calcutta Examiner remarks:—"A contemporary is wrong in thinking that the withdrawal of the five batteries of horse artillery to England, in March, will be contrary to Sir William Mansfield's views. The late Commander-in-Chief was a party to the recommendation of 1865, in pursuance of which that withdrawal, it is believed, has now been directed. To sanction in 1871 a plan proposed upwards of five years previously, looks rather tardy; but it may be that but for the presence of Sir William Mansfield in London that plan would not even now be sanctioned. The withdrawal serves two patent purposes — reduces the military charges in this country, and increases the strength of the home garrison." — Orders have been positively received by the Government of India for the despatch of the following batteries (five) of horse artillery to England:—F Battery C Brigade, from Umballa; C and D Batteries, E Brigade, from Hyderabad and Kirkee; and C and D Batteries of the D Brigade, from Secunderabad and Bangalore. Lieut.-Colonel Crips, who has just returned from England to the Jullunder division, has not as yet taken charge; he is very ill, but we trust not seriously.—Indian Public Opinion, Feb. 3.—During the past year the following men have volunteered from home-going regiments to regiments remaining in India:—1st Battalion 1st Royal Regiment, 342; 1st Battalion 7th Fusiliers, 157; 88th Foot, 27; 95th Foot, 205; 103rd Fusiliers, 134; total, 965. Besides these, 164 men were allowed to volunteer from the 3rd Battalion Rifle Brigade before it left India for Aden, whence it is to go home next cold season. The Friend of India believes that the volunteers have been in a great part married men, "a very suggestive fact for the army, and one that might well teach army administrators an important lesson."

Tea Gardens in Bengal.—In Gowalparah the trivial cultivation carried on is in the hands of natives, and has remained stationary during the last few years. Only 325 acres are under tea cultivation, giving a total out-turn of about 2,470 lbs., against 2,050 lbs. in the preceding year. Average monthly labourers employed on the gardens thirty-five, of whom none were imported. Of gardens there are twenty in Sylhet, occupying an area of 28,144 acres, of which 2,956 are under tea cultivation. During 1869 these gardens turned out an aggregate of 362,962 lbs., against 250,905 lbs. during 1868, showing thereby an increase of 112,056 lbs. Of imported labourers an average monthly number of 235 was employed, and of local labourers 1,070. In Cachar the number of gardens in which work is being carried on is 122, comprising an area of 244,488 acres, of which 24,151 acres are under tea cultivation. The total out-turn of tea in these gardens during the year was 4,234,794lbs., against 3,630,351lbs., of the preceding year, giving an increase of 604,443lbs. Average monthly number of imported labourers employed in tea manufacture, 11,087, of local 15,908. Amount of cash drawn from the district treasury by supply bills, money orders, and notes cashed, Rs. 20,04,647, against Rs. 19,84,957, drawn during the preceding year. In Assam there are altogether 315 tea gardens, comprising a total area of 246,584 acres, of which 107,321 acres are held in grants under the old rules, 115,179 acres in fee-simple under the new rules, and 24,084 acres under cultivation leases, or rent-paying pottahs. Out of the entire area, only 28,954 acres are under tea cultivation, the total out-turn during 1869 being 4,946,139lbs., against 4,306,927lbs. in the preceding year, which shows an increase of 639,212lbs. The average monthly number of imported labourers employed on the gardens during the year was 27,492; and of local labourers 17,486.

Coroners' Law.—Mr. Fitjames Stephen, in his speech on the Coroners' Bill, described the English law in regard to coroners, and mentioned that a coroner was bound to describe the whole matter and the whole way in which the person came by his death in a manner which seemed to him extremely absurd. For instance, the proper way of saying a man was killed by a railway accident was as follows, first:—"The jurors aforesaid upon their oaths aforesaid say that a certain locomotive steam-engine numbered — —, with a certain tender attached thereto and worked therewith, and also with divers, to wit, ten carriages used for the conveyance of passengers for hire on a certain railway called the —— railway, and which said carriages were then attached and fastened together and to the tender, and were then propelled by the said locomotive steam-engine, were moving and travelling along the said railway." Having made this statement, "the jurors aforesaid, on their oaths aforesaid," took breath—as well they might—and then proceeded to swear, in an equally cumbrous manner, that whilst all this was going on "a certain other locomotive steam-engine numbered —— with a certain other tender attached," &c., "and also with divers, to wit, five other carriages," &c., &c., "were also going along the railway." They then stated that the dead man was sitting in one of the second set of carriages. Then that "the said first mentioned locomotive steam-engine, tender and carriages going on," &c., and "the said secondly mentioned locomotive," &c., "being then so respectively moving and travelling upon the said railway in different and opposite directions came into sudden, violent and forcible contact and collision by means whereof the said R. R. then received divers mortal wounds, bruises and concussions, of which said mortal wounds, bruises and concussions the said R. F. then instantly died." It seemed to him (Mr. Stephen) that to say that the man was killed by a railway accident would be as good and more intelligible.

Civil.—Colonel Crichton, C.B., Deputy Commissioner 1st class, has taken extension of leave in England, by which he vacates his appointment in the C. P.; promotions in his room are not yet announced.—We are given to understand that Colonel Moxon, District Superintendent of Police, Nagpore, proceeds to Europe on furlough in April next, and that Captain Bradshaw, District Superintendent of Police, Wardha, is likely to be transferred to Nagpore.—We learn that Captain T. H. B. Brooke, officiating Cantonment Magistrate, Kamthi, leaves for England immediately, and that Captain Pemberton, Assistant Commissioner, Nagpore, is to officiate temporarily, pending the arrival of Captain C. H. Plowden, Assistant Commissioner, from Narsinghpur, who it is said will succeed Captain Brooke.—At last we hear from a reliable source that it has been determined to transfer Mr. C. Grant from the Chattisgurh to the Jabalpur Commissionership as a permanent arrangement to fill the vacancy made by the retirement of Colonel Spence. The Chattisgurh Commissionership has been conferred on Major Cumberlege, who is expected to pass through Nagpore this day on his way to relieve Mr. Grant.—Central India Times, Feb. 4.—It is believed that Sir George Couper will shortly be invited to take (for the second time) a seat in the Supreme Legislative Council.—A committee, consisting of members of the Civil Service, has been appointed by Government to consider the question of the graded system of salaries.—The Lahore journal hears that Mr. Forsyth proceeds immediately to England, and trusts that "he will not forget to lay certain matters connected with a feudatory before the Secretary of State, and, if need be, before the public of England."—Lieut.-Colonel Elliott has been transferred from Umballa, where he has cleared off all arrears, to be Additional Commissioner of Umritsur, where there are over nine hundred appeals pending! Lieut.-Colonel Elliott is one of our most industrious officials, and cannot fail to distinguish himself in the Umritsur district.—Indian Public Opinion, Feb. 3.

IMPORTS.—CALCUTTA, Feb. 8.—After departure of the last mail the tone of the market became quieter, and the demand for goods and yarns generally has since gradually fallen off. Grey Shirtings particularly are now very quiet; dealers during the late activity having purchased large quantities of these, now find their hands more full of them than they expected. Importers, however, are not pressing sales, and though prices have a slightly downward tendency, they are hardly quotably lower. Wide widths are neglected and prices nominal. Madapollams and T-Cloths continue very quiet, without change in rates. Grey Jaconets: Low makes continue in good demand at rather firmer rates. Grey Mulls: 44-inch, under a good inquiry, have advanced during the week, and other widths are also firmer. We have also to note an advance in values of 44-inch Bleached Mulls, there being at present a moderate demand. Other Bleached Goods are without change. Twist: The best spinnings of 40's are in fair demand, but other qualities are quiet and values are slightly weaker since our last; 50's are quoted Low to medium of 40's to 100's are in demand at former prices. Coloured Twist: Some inquiry exists for orange, but, with this exception, the market is very quiet.

EXPORTS.—CALCUTTA, Feb. 8.—Saltpetre: During the week we have heard of very few transactions in this article to report. To-day's quotations are for Calcutta-washed Saltpetre, Rs. 7 to 7-8. The stock is the same as we quoted before. Rice: A fair amount of business has been done for shipments in Table kinds at our last quotations. In Ballam and Moonghy Rice we have heard of no change to report. Linseed: No transactions have been done for shipments, owing to the paucity of stock; but there is some inquiry for this article. Rapeseed: None in the market. Teelseed: Same as before. Poppyseed: New crop has arrived in the market, but we have heard of no transaction to report, owing to the high prices asked by the sellers. Jute: The demand that prevailed in the market as we last wrote has abated a little owing to the several buyers having left purchases. We quote their prices: For fine Serangunge, Rs. 6-6 to 6-11; good, Rs. 6 to 6-4; low kind, Rs. 4-15 to 5-4; Dacca fine, Rs. 5-3; low to good, Rs. 4-12 to 5-4. Raw Silk: Since the date of our last 20 maunds of Cossimbazar at Rs. 19-8 to 20-4, and about 60 maunds of Jungypore at Rs. 17-8 to 19-8 per seer have changed hands. The stock is about 60 maunds of Silk, both Cossimbazar and Jungypore. Silk Piece Goods: 2,000 pieces of corahs have found buyers at prices ranging from Rs. 133 to 140 per corge. Stock about 4,000 pieces.

Madras.

BANK OF MADRAS.—The Bank of Madras last week raised its rate of interest on loans on the security of Government paper half per cent. The rate of discount on bills has been raised one per cent.

THE TIGER NUISANCE.—We hear from the Hyderabad Deccan that in consequence of the number of tigers infesting the road between Doomagoodum and Ellore, in the Nizam's territories, the tappal runners upon the route threaten to strike work. One of their number was recently killed by a tiger, and the Government of the Nizam has handsomely offered to place elephants at the disposal of any officers of the Hyderabad Subsidiary Force who may feel inclined to rid the road of the tigers. It is said that, with the sanction of the General commanding, a shooting party is to be organised for this purpose.—Madras Times.

THE 60TH RIFLES.—It is said that a court of inquiry is to be held at Bellary, to investigate the "inner economy" of the 3-60th Rifles, to which Ensign Gilbert, now cashiered, belonged.

MR. R. ELLIS.—The Hon. R. S. Ellis, Chief Secretary to the Madras Government, has, says a Madras paper of the 4th, been rather seriously ill. His malady has now, however, assumed a less dangerous form, and his early recovery may be expected.

INCOME-TAX EXEMPTIONS.—The Madras Government considers that by principle of the exemption from Income-tax the Supreme Government in their letter dated 23rd September, 1870, of passage-money granted to widows by the Military Fund, is equally applicable to the similar grants made to officers proceeding to Europe on sick certificate, and has directed that these latter be exempted accordingly.

THE GILBERT COURT-MARTIAL.—The Madras Times corrects a general impression that the case of Ensign Gilbert has been referred home for the decision of the Commander-in-Chief of the British Army. It has good reason to believe that Lord Napier's confirmation of the sentence is final, and that no reference has been made to the home authorities. Of course it is at any time open to the Duke of Cambridge to consider whether Ensign Gilbert should, as a matter of special grace and favour, be reinstated.

THE MADRAS GOVERNMENT.—Lord Napier of Madras and his Council will not adjourn to Ootacamund this year until August, and will be absent from the Presidency for only three months. It was originally determined to migrate in April, in accordance with a recent despatch from the Secretary of State; but there is a great deal of work to be got through, in connection especially with the Decentralisation Scheme; and the Legislative Department, it is added, is deluged with draft Bills from Calcutta to be reported upon before April, when the Government of India will remove to Simla.

MR. GILBERT.—A gentleman writes to the Friend of India, "A little bird has whispered something which is too pleasant to be kept secret. Nevertheless it is a secret, a lady's secret, be it observed. Ensign Gilbert, lately cashiered because no other sentence was possible according to military law, albeit the sentence was condemned upon every principle of private right and justice, will be provided for. It is not intended that the wrong already inflicted by his removal from her Majesty's army shall go any further. And what about Colonel Kennedy? What indeed!"

A TIGER STORY.—The Neilgherry press has of late published a few things about tigers, evidently intended "for the Marines." Here is the latest:—"Riding the other day, all alone, at about three in the afternoon, through a dense shola a couple of miles to the west of Kandel, and on the Avalanche road, I suddenly came upon a tiger fast asleep in the middle of the road. The footsteps of my steed awoke his royal highness, who threw himself on his haunches and showed his teeth. My horse reared from fright, and in bringing himself down all fours, gave the tiger a tremendous whack on the head with one of his fore feet. The royal beast whined like a puppy, and plunged into the shola as hard as he could."

THE JUNCTION AT RAICHORE.—In communicating sanction for an expenditure of Rs. 4,36,126, for the construction of a joint station at the Raichore junction, for the use of the Madras and Great Indian Peninsula Railway Companies, the Government of India approve of the staff quarters and the buildings required for the locomotives of the latter company being built by that company, but trust that the construction and maintenance of the remainder will be undertaken by the Madras Company, who are to provide the station. Joint occupation, it is observed, is most desirable, but joint ownership is to be avoided, and the G.I.P. Railway should, therefore, pay a sufficient rental for their share of the general station arrangements. In reference to this subject, the Supreme Government have also desired to be informed whether the expectation of opening the North-West line to Raichore by the end of March, 1871, is likely to be realised.—Madras Athenæum.

MILITARY.—The Madras Times hears that the question of abolishing the office of Deputy Secretary to Government in the Military Department was lately under the consideration of the Madras Government. His Excellency the Governor is said to have been in favour of abolition, as a measure of economy; but a majority of his Council, being of an opposite opinion, the appointment is not to be abolished.—In regard to the deficiency of eighteen thousand rupees in the regimental accounts of H.M.'s 45th Foot, a Madras contemporary hopes it may appear that the deficiency is only an apparent one, caused by the confusion resulting from the late fatal illness of the paymaster of the regiment. The matter is now under investigation.—The Madras Times has been requested by the officers of H.M.'s 76th Regiment to say that there is no truth in a report that cholera has broken out among the men of that regiment; both wings are in perfect health.

PONDICHERRY.—The telegram announcing that Bismarck had asked for the cession of Pondicherry created great consternation in that pretty little town on Saturday last. A messenger was sent to the Governor at Le Grand Etang, who immediately came into town, and summoned a council of the authorities, at which it was decided to call a public meeting of the inhabitants to sign a protest against being handed over to Prussia, which will go forward by next mail. How Bismarck will sneer at the kick of a crushed fly. The Government of Pondicherry has possibly in some small degree brought this calamity on their own heads. Had they remained perfectly quiet during the war, their existence might have been ignored as heretofore; but having set about buying up all the coal in India, and making a fuss over their insignificant fortifications, they attracted the attention of the voracious Chancellor, who has determined to gobble up the settlement. Having asked for twenty ships, the coals ready to supply an Indian fleet on the beach at Pondicherry followed as a necessary sequence. It is true that Monsieur Boutemps acted under instructions from Admiral Renault de Gonouilly; but it would have been easy to fine some pretext for delaying the purchase, the more so as the coals had to be bought on credit. (We hope they will be paid for!) —Madras Mail.

Bombay.

A New Hotel.—The immense hotel built by Mr. Watson at Rampart Row, Bombay, and called the Esplanade Hotel, was opened on Saturday, February 4.

Kattywar.—We understand that the foundation stone of a High School in Kattywar was to be laid on the 8th February. It is said that his Highness the Nawab of Joonaghur has contributed about Rs. 60,000 for the erection of the school.

Bombay Snider Ammunition Factory.—We learn that the local authorities have ordered Mr. Poke, mechanical engineer, to proceed to Bombay and do duty at the Snider Ammunition Factory at that Presidency.—Madras Athenæum, Feb. 1.

Elphinstone College.—The new building at Bombay for the Elphinstone College, built at the joint expense of Mr. Cowasjee Jehanghier Readymoney, C.S.I., and Government, is now ready for occupation.

The "Aurora" Frauds.—The surgeon of the Bombay House of Correction has recommended that Government should transfer Whitwell (convicted, along with his partner Elmstone, of complicity in the conspiracy to burn the ship Aurora) to England, his life being endangered by further residence in this country.

Baroda.—It is said that his Highness the Gaekwar of Baroda will visit Bombay in March, to unveil the Queen's statue, which had been ordered from England by his brother, the late Gaekwar.

Muscat.—Muscat has been taken by Syed Toorkee's troops; Azanbin Ghes, the usurper, and Syf-bin-Sulliman, Toorkee's Commander-in-Chief, were among the slain. The sovereignty of Oman has, therefore, returned to the old family, a branch of which reigns in Zanzibar.

Mr. Goltchman.—At the Bombay Criminal Sessions on the 4th February, Samuel Goltchman, formerly secretary of the Mazagon Company, was sent to prison for six years for forging the names of Mr. George Taylor, barrister, and Lieut. Boyes, 2-12th Regiment, Jubbulpore, on a cheque for £60, drawn on Messrs. Cox and Co., which was cashed by Mr. Hibbert, of Messrs. Cutler, Palmer and Co.

Arrival of the Turret Ship "Magdala."—H.M.'s iron-clad turret ship Magdala arrived in Bombay harbour on the night of Feb. 7, from London. The Magdala is sister vessel to the turret ship Abyssinia, and, like her, is for the defence of Bombay harbour; in no respect do the two vessels differ. The Magdala left England on Nov. 26; Gibraltar, Dec. 6; Malta, Dec. 14; Suez, Jan. 10; and Aden, Jan. 29. Clear and fair weather was experienced throughout the voyage.

Something Nice for the Hot Season.—A gentleman connected with the G.I.P. Railway Company has informed us that Mr. R. D. Saunders, the energetic Locomotive Superintendent at Byculla, is fitting up a patent hot-weather travelling carriage, and as the result of his experiments he can cool the temperature of its saloon down to 62 deg. when the thermometer of the rest of the world stands at 92 deg. It will be recollected that the Governor General of India in Council called the attention of the railway companies to the necessity of adopting some plan for cooling passenger carriages before the setting in of another hot season, and recommended the measure very strongly to the consideration of the local Governments.—Deccan Herald, Feb. 6.

Tiger Shooting.—His Excellency the Governor killed two tigers in the Bassein district on Monday and Tuesday, one of which was a magnificent beast of over eleven feet. His Excellency left Parell for Bassein on Monday, and, under the guidance of W. B. Mulock, Esq., C.S., one of the best shikarrees in this part of India, and whose local knowledge was of great service, proceeded to the jungle near Toongar. A tiger was soon found, which fell to the Governor's rifle, and shortly afterwards another was wounded. On Tuesday morning his Excellency went out again and succeeded in bagging the one he had hit hard on the previous day. This is the best sport in the shortest time that has been known in the neighbourhood of Bombay for a considerable time. It is said that Salsette is now literally swarming with tigers, but until the jungle is cleared, there will be little chance of getting at them. His Excellency returned to Bombay on Tuesday night.—Times of India, Feb. 11.

Colonel Baigrie.—We learn from Jowrah that Colonel R. Baigrie, late general "doing duty" officer at Mhow, and of the Bombay Staff Corps, has been appointed Commandant at Puchmurry, a new military sanitarium station in the Hoosungabad district, Central Provinces. Six barracks are to be built there, at a cost to the State of Rs. 45,000 each, for the European troops of the Bengal Army. An assistant-engineer, an overseer, and two sub-overseers—all of them of the P.W.D., Central Provinces—have already arrived at Jowrah, and the works are expected to be proceeded with with as little delay as possible. It is said that Puchmurry will be a first-class sanitarium station. It is a very large place, and is considered to be very healthy, according to the opinion of a committee of medical officers. Private individuals will also be allowed to build bungalows on the hill, and as it is a far nearer station than Simla, we have no doubt it will, in course of time, come to be largely resorted to.—Poona Observer, Feb. 7.

The Appeal of Bombay and Madras for "Good Appointments."—Colonel Malleson has written a letter to the Madras Mail, in reply to an article calling attention to the number of Bengal officials who have been appointed to high appointments in the other presidencies, to the dissatisfaction of "indigenous" talent. Colonel Malleson reproaches the Madras and Bombay Presidencies with objecting to the appointment of outsiders, while Bengal receives thankfully officials chosen from anywhere. Lord Mayo, he tells us, "has made during the last twelve months seven superior appointments in the Bengal Presidency, of which five have been bestowed upon officers from the sister presidencies, viz., the command of the troops on the Punjab frontier, the Chief Commissionership of Oude, and the acting appointments of Agent at Moradabad, Chief Commissioner of the Central Provinces, and Agent in Central India." The Madras Mail, in reply, points out that this "letter does not dispose of the objection taken by it to the civil appointments given away to Bengalees, which was throughout the real grievance complained of. Besides, of Colonel Malleson's five instances, Colonels Keyes, Barrow, Thornhill, and Keatinge, and General Daly, the first two and last two could hardly have been bestowed otherwise than they were, while the other, that of Colonel Thornhill to the officiating Agency at the Court of the Nawab Nazim, is hardly one of sufficient importance to weigh against such appointments as the Chief and Judicial Commissionerships of Mysore, or even the guardianship of the Maharajah.

Memorial to the late Rajah of Kolapore.—To perpetuate the memory of the young Rajah of Kolapore in connection with the cause of education, it has been proposed by his mother that the new High School at Kolapore—the foundation stone of which the late Rajah laid—shall be named the Rajaram High School. The Government of Bombay has agreed to this suggestion.

Military.—The detachment 2nd Grenadiers arrived here by special train from Asseerghur on Thursday evening last.—Poona Observer, Feb. 4.—The Standing Medical Committee assembled on the 9th Feb. at Bombay, to examine Colonel Carleton, C. B., Royal Artillery, Captain H. Adcock, 1-6th Foot, Captain R. Daubeny, 36th Foot, Lieutenant J. A. Grattan, Royal Artillery, Vet. Surgeon Ferris, Royal Artillery, &c.—The Kurrachee Depot: The reason assigned for the abolition of the Kurrachee Depot is, we believe, owing to through communication having been opened by rail between Bombay and the N. W. Provinces, and the Punjab; this will obviate the necessity of sending troops via the Indus to those places.—Sindian, Feb. 1.—The Details of H.M.'s 3rd Hussars, consisting of one officer, twenty-eight non-commissioned officers and rank and file, three women, and two children; and of the A.E., R.H.A., consisting of one officer and eight non-commissioned rank and file, will march to Ahmednuggur from the general depot via Seroor, to-morrow morning, the 10th inst.—Poona Observer, Feb. 9.—The detachment of the 1-2nd Queen's, which was stationed for some time at Sattara, arrived at Belgaum on the 25th ult. On arrival at Kolapoor the detachment experienced a heavy storm and rain, in consequence of which it was put to great inconvenience. The 12th Regiment Native Infantry also arrived at Belgaum from Vingorla on the morning of the 27th ult.—Poona Observer, Feb. 4.—Colonels Gaye and Wallace, of the Royal Artillery, have, we believe, received orders to proceed to Mhow to take command of Artillery at that station and division, handing over command to Colonel Connybeare at Kirkee. The station will regret the departure of these two popular officers very much, and Colonel Gaye's presence at our amateur theatricals will be missed greatly. It will be difficult to obtain an officer to take the prominent part he ever held in catering for the public amusement.—Poona Observer, Feb. 6.

Investiture of a Rajah.—Colonel Brooke, Agent to the Governor-General in Rajpootana, is now, says the Examiner, on his way to the little State of Shahpoora, and on his arrival there the formal investiture of the young Maharajah will take place. "It will be remembered that the late Chief of Shahpoora died in 1869, after a career which belied the good promises of his youth. He left no issue, but on his death it was asserted by a party in the palace that he had, on his deathbed, adopted an heir, and the individual thus said to be adopted at once prepared to assume the chief authority. The Indian Government interfered and caused the circumstances of the alleged adoption to be investigated. It then appeared doubtful whether there had even been an attempt at adoption by the dying chief, and beyond all doubt that no formal and valid adoption had been consummated. The pretender was therefore set aside, and to the joy of the population of Shahpoora the next of kin of the deceased chief was recognised as successor. It is this young chief whom Colonel Brooke is now about to formally invest with full authority. The rule of the Government of India in cases of adoption is substantially that if the ceremony has been performed with the free will of the chief, and in strict accordance with the requirements of Hindoo law, and the adopted party is desired as a ruler by the people of the State, Government will consider itself bound to acquiesce in and support the adoption, notwithstanding that it may not consider the adopted party the most proper person to have been selected; but should the adoption have in any particular been informally performed, the Government of India reserves to itself the power of setting it aside, and installing a more eligible scion of the reigning house or race. In short, in such cases, Government is hardly bound to anything but not to annex."

Imports.—Bombay, Feb. 11.—The market throughout has been extremely dull, and the business done has been on the smallest possible scale. The dulness appears to be attributable to the want of confidence felt in the bazaar with respect to up-country buyers, among whom more failures have been announced, and to the belief, generally entertained, in a lower range of prices, which must follow the declining tendency of the Cotton Market. Grey Goods have continued dull throughout the week, with little or no change in prices; Shirtings were in little request. Bleached Goods: Mulls being scarce in the bazaar, are in fair demand, at better prices, the sales reported being 3,000 pieces 45-inch Green ends, at Rs. 2-9½; and 4,300 pieces, 40 to 42-inch, at Rs. 2-0½ to 3-10, according to quality. Of Tanjibs the sales are 8,850 pieces, 33 to 35 inches, at Rs. 1-9½ to 1-11 per piece; stocks are liberal. Of Jacconets sales are reported of 5,300 pieces; and of Shirtings, 350 pieces, at prices slightly in favour of buyers, supplies being large. Dyed and Printed Goods: The amount of business done in both Dyed and Printed Fabrics has been limited, and although we do not alter our nominal quotations, lower values would have to be accepted to effect sales. Turkey Red Goods: No transactions worthy of special note have transpired, and we report our former quotations; stocks continue large. Twist: Importers continue to show considerable firmness, and for 70's Mule, which is very scarce, an advance of ¼ annas per lb. has been established; while 40's Mule may also be quoted ¼ anna per lb. in sellers' favour; but dealers still show no inclination to buy beyond their present requirements. Dyed Yarns in comparatively moderate supply, and command an improvement of ¼ anna per lb. Metals.—Copper: The inquiry is still very limited, and only small business has been done, at a decline of 4 annas to 8 annas per cwt. in Braziers and English Tiles. In Yellow Metals some small sales have been effected, at an improvement of 8 annas per cwt. In Iron, British Bars must be quoted 8 annas per candy lower, but other descriptions are unchanged; stocks are now excessive, but the consumption is small. Spelter and Tin Plates have declined Rs. 1 per cwt., and Bar respectively. Lead has improved 4 annas to 8 annas per cwt. Other Metals are unaltered in value.

Exports.—Bombay, Feb. 11.—Cotton: The tenor of the home telegrams has induced dealers to reduce their demands about Rs. 5 to 8 per candy since last mail left, but even at this level the cost shows no margin on Liverpool currencies, and exporters have had no inducement to ship, especially in the present unsettled state of political affairs in Europe. The purchases reported during the week on European account only sum about 10,000 bales, while the receipts from up-country are steadily on the increase. The arrivals still consist chiefly of Oomrawuttee, Hinguncghat, and Khandeish, the quality of which is very fair; but small parcels of New Broach are also coming to hand now, and may be expected in quantity in the course of another week or ten days. In other articles of export there is no change to note.

Pensions and Gratuities, Uncovenanted Service.—The Governor-General in Council having observed that the admission into the service of Government of other than young men tends to throw upon the State an undue liability in respect of pensionary allowances, H.E. in Council is accordingly pleased to declare that, as a general rule, no person should be admitted into the Uncovenanted Service of Government after he has attained the age of twenty-five years. But if, for special reasons, any one is after this date admitted at a later age, then, in the event of his being required to retire under the operation of any rule for the removal of officers from the service as superannuated on their attaining a particular age, the pension to which he would, but for this rule, be entitled, shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of years of pensionable service he has completed bears to thirty years, the full period required for a good service pension. For instance, if an officer so retiring has completed twenty years' service, then his pension will be one third of his average pay multiplied by 20-30; if he has completed twenty-six years, then it will be half his average pay multiplied by 26-30.

COURT-MARTIAL.

Ensign G. P. Gilbert, 3rd Battalion 60th Rifles.

Head Quarters Camp, Jan. 24, 1871.—At a general court-martial, assembled at Fort Saint George, Madras, Nov. 1, 1870, Ensign George Percy Gilbert, 3rd battalion 60th (the King's) royal rifle corps, was arraigned on the following charge :—

Insubordination, in having, at Bellary, on Sept. 19, 1870, at a parade of the battalion under arms, disobeyed the lawful command of Lieut. col. Henry Friend Kennedy, his superior officer, commanding the parade, by refusing to advance when ordered to do so, saying, in a loud voice, "No, I will be damned if I do," or words to that effect; at the same time throwing his sword violently away.

Finding.—The court find that the prisoner is guilty of the charge.

Sentence.—The court sentence the prisoner to be cashiered.

H. W. Parish, Col., C.B., commanding H.M.'s 45th Foot, President.

The court have found Ensign Gilbert guilty of an act of the gravest insubordination, committed on parade, in front of the men under his immediate command, and have sentenced him to be cashiered, but have earnestly recommended him to mercy on the ground of "extreme provocation from his commanding officer," and his previous high character. It is with great pain that I find myself unable to yield to this earnest recommendation. Acts of insubordination have prevailed in the army, during the last two years, to an extent which threatened, if unchecked, to impair seriously all regimental authority; in some cases provocation has been urged as an excuse, and it has been necessary to show, by the certainty of punishment, that nothing can palliate insubordination. It is nowhere shown that Ensign Gilbert sought the means provided by the Articles of War for obtaining protection from the harshness of his commanding officer. The interests of discipline, on which the welfare of the army depends, forbid my condoning Ensign Gilbert's offence, and thus converting it into a dangerous example.

Napier of Magdala, Gen., C. in C. in India.

ACCIDENT TO THE PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL STEAMER "DELTA."—(LISBON, March 3).—The Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamer Delta, from Southampton, Feb. 25, has arrived with port paddle shaft broken, which cannot be repaired here. The Candia, which left Southampton on Saturday, will call at Lisbon to take on the Delta's mails, passengers, and cargo, which will thus reach their destination only a week late. The steamer from Suez corresponding with the Delta will leave for Bombay at the usual time with the Brindisi portion of the mail and passengers and Liverpool cargo.

INDIAN ART WORKS.—In the latter part of his speech on the Indian Budget, Mr. Grant Duff drew a contrast between the admirable works of art contributed by India to one Exhibition after another—to say nothing of the samples stored up in the India Museum—and the very limited sale they seemed to command, as a rule, in this country. It is certainly wonderful that so little of the exquisite work turned out by Indian artisans should have found its way into the English market; the more especially when so many masterpieces of Indian workmanship may be studied almost daily both in Downing-street and South Kensington. It is not the fault of the British public, for at the Islington Exhibition of last summer the prettiest things in the Indian Department were bought up so eagerly that, before the close of the Exhibition, the original stock might have been replaced several times over. Hundreds of people who went to buy something Indian found themselves forestalled by earlier visitors. And many, both of the successful and the disappointed, were working men, and such like, to whom the cheapness of the Indian goods was in itself a great temptation. What, then, is the reason of the small demand of which the Under Secretary complains? Is it because high prices and a limited supply tend to limit a demand which would else be practically unlimited?—Home News.

A QUESTIONABLE SENTENCE.—Dr. Colvin Smith has been fined five rupees for striking with an umbrella two painters who not only disobeyed his orders, but thereby, it may be reasonably inferred, endangered the life of a patient lying dangerously ill in one of the wards of Vepery Hospital. In a strictly legal point of view (says the Madras Mail) Captain Lys' decision was doubtless correct. At the same time it seems to us that our police magistrates should temper their justice with common sense. So far as we can understand the case, the two painters seem to have richly deserved the chastisement, and their complaint ought to have been dismissed as frivolous. Under an elastic penal code, however, Dr. Smith is found guilty of the heinous offence of "criminal force." Criminal force with an umbrella! We should like to have the evidence of the poor patient who was lying dangerously ill.

GIRLS SOLD IN THE KHANDEISH DISTRICTS.—We understand that about thirty-one native girls of different castes and ages are in charge of the police at Nimar. It appears that about two months ago the police of Nimar obtained information that a number of native girls had been kidnapped and sold by some people of the Kunjur caste, in different parts of the Khandeish district, for the purpose of being brought up as prostitutes. They were indefatigable in their exertions to seek out the unfortunates, and, as stated above, have happily succeeded in finding a number of them in the houses of women of ill fame. The parents or relations of these girls have not as yet, it would seem, been found to identify and claim them, but the police are inquiring for them. The unprincipled delinquents will be tried by the Deputy Commissioner, who, we hope, will inflict on them that punishment which they richly deserve. It is to be hoped that Government will send those girls who may be orphans or friendless to some suitable charitable institution, where they could be taught some handiwork, if not to read and write.—Poona Observer, Feb. 6

EAST INDIA COTTON AGENCY.—A further dividend of 15s., making with previous payments 20s. in the pound, is payable to the creditors of the East India Cotton Agency (Limited), at the offices of the official liquidator, Mr. George T. Hart (Hart Brothers and Co.).

BILLS ON INDIA.—Tenders for £400,000 in bills on India were received on Wednesday, the 1st inst., at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—to Calcutta, £300,000, to Bombay, £100,000. The minimum price was fixed at 1s. 10$\frac{1}{2}$d. on all the Presidencies. Tenders on Calcutta at 1s. 10$\frac{1}{2}$d will receive about 12 per cent.; above, in full. On Bombay at 1s. 10$\frac{3}{8}$d. in full.

ALBERT ASSURANCE COMPANY.—The Albert Reconstruction Scheme came before the Lords Justices on Wednesday and Thursday, but, after a lengthened hearing, they expressed their deep regret that the jurisdiction of the Court was not, under the Statute, sufficient to enable them to deal with the case. They however intimated a strong opinion that the case was one for special legislation, in order to put an end to the enormous litigation and expenses which must attend the winding-up. Notice of an Act in Parliament has already been given, in anticipation of such a course being necessary.

BURMAH COMPANY.—The following relates to the winding-up of the Burmah Company:—"9, Austin-friars, February 28, 1871. Sir,—With reference to the paragraph in your article of to-day, stating that the Burmah Company (Limited) have resolved to wind up voluntarily, we beg to inform you that this is merely a formal proceeding to carry out arrangements of transfer to new proprietors, by whom the business is being carried on under the same name. —Yours faithfully, GLEDSTANES, EWART, and Co., Agents, Burmah Company, Limited."

THE BRINDISI ROUTE.—A question was asked in the Italian Chamber on the 1st inst. as to a report of the transfer of the Peninsular and Oriental Company's station from Brindisi to Trieste. The Minister of Public Works replied that he had received no official information on the matter. At the same time he assured the Chamber that the Government is ready to prosecute actively and energetically the works at the port of Brindisi. The men best fitted in Italy to pronounce opinions on such matters had been consulted, and the Government had determined to spend the money in Brindisi which was necessary to make its position as a port worthy of its important geographical situation.

INDO-EUROPEAN TELEGRAPH COMPANY (LIMITED).—The fourth ordinary general meeting of this company was held last week at the London Tavern; the Hon. Robert Grimston, chairman of the board of directors, presided. The Secretary (Mr. W. Andrew) having read the notice convening the meeting, the report was taken as read. It stated that the gross revenue for the eleven months ending 31st of December last amounted to £25,268. 1s. 3d., and expenses, including maintenance, to the same sum. The amount payable to Messrs. Siemens for maintenance was much less than that provided by the contract. Under a provisional arrangement made between the company and Messrs. Siemens, owing to the exceptional circumstances of the case, the company was to pay the actual outlay incurred on maintenance account; but if the balance of receipts, after payment of working expenses, was insufficient to do that, Messrs. Siemens should accept the balance, whatever that might be, in full settlement. The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, said he appeared before the shareholders in the unenviable position of having to account for hopes deferred, and expectations not realised. Yet he could fairly say that the present state of things was not the fault of any individual or body of individuals, but owing to circumstances which no person could foresee or control. The first and principal reason was, that the traffic between India and England did not develop itself to the extent they were led to expect. At one time it was supposed that the traffic between the two countries would not only provide employment for one line, but for half-a-dozen, provided that the accuracy of messages could be attained with strictness of time of transmission. As far as accuracy was concerned, he must say that the company could take credit to itself on that score—because complaints had been few and far between. The time taken in transmission had also been greatly reduced, as they might see by the telegrams themselves in the daily papers. But still the traffic had not increased at the rate they had a right to expect. He had to mention a piece of liberality for which he, as the chairman of the company, felt very grateful. They were aware that Messrs. Siemens held one-fifth of the capital of the company, and therefore they fully shared with the other proprietors in the adversity of the company, as they would do in the future prosperity for which they all trusted. But Messrs. Siemens had the interest of the company at heart, beyond the mere commercial aspects of the company. They felt that their name and reputation were bound up and identified with this company, which was known throughout the world by "Siemens' line." This being so, they had dealt with the company in the liberal manner indicated, and which had enabled the directors to present the accounts in their present form. Mr. Edward Walters seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously.

DEATH OF SIR A. C. STERLING, K.C.B.—We have to record the death of Sir Anthony Coningham Sterling, K.C.B., which took place on Wednesday last. Sir Anthony, who was in his 67th year, entered the army in 1826, and served in the Eastern campaign of 1854-55, and was present at the battles of Alma, Balaklava, and Inkerman, and the siege and fall of Sebastopol. In 1858 he accompanied Sir Colin Campbell, as his military secretary, to India, and was with him throughout his active services in the suppression of the Indian Mutiny. He was made a Companion of the Order of the Bath for his services in the Crimea, and in 1860 a Knight Commander of that distinguished Order.

FINANCIAL.—A Parliamentary return shows the cost of our colonies to the British Exchequer in 1868-9 was £3 962,799, less military contributions £333,204, and premium on bills £9,482, making the net total £3,620,686. The following were the objects and amount of expenditure:—Governors, £22,807; justices, £6,394; other salaries of clerks, &c., £1,725; pensions, £14,605; gaols, £133,591; fortifications and other military defences, £215,584; barracks, £161,563; lighthouses, £25,957; survey department, £2,060; Indian department, £16; ecclesiastical, £22,424; miscellaneous charges and aids, £36.625; cost of regular troops, £2,994,745; naval charges, £324, 079; steamers, &c., £604.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, TUESDAY, Feb. 28.—THE AUGMENTATION OF THE ARMY.—Mr. CARDWELL, in reply to Mr. KENNAWAY, said that no augmentation of officers was intended, but the claims of officers had been and would be considered on every occasion, both by his Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief and by himself.

THE INDIAN ARTILLERY.—Mr. GRANT DUFF, in reply to Colonel BARTTELOT, said that, as soon as the correspondence between the Horse Guards with respect to the proposals of the Government of India for the reduction of the artillery force in that country was complete, there would be no difficulty in laying it on the table, if the hon. and gallant gentleman would move for it.

INDIAN APPEALS.—Mr. GLADSTONE stated, in reply to General FORESTER, that it was not intended to make the subject of Indian appeals, or the mode of determining claims of natives of India against the Government, part of the reference to the select committee on Indian affairs. The hands of the committee were quite full, and the suggested inquiry as to the operation of the "political plea" was really not required.

HOUSE OF LORDS, THURSDAY, March 2.—INDIAN FINANCE.—Lord LYVEDEN asked the Secretary of State for India whether he intends to move for a select committee on East Indian finance. In doing so the noble lord deprecated strongly the idea broached in a recent discussion in the House of Commons, that the House of Lords have no right to inquire into the state or administration of the Indian finances, and expressed his great regret that the proposal made by the Government for a joint committee of both Houses on the subject had not been accepted by the other House. The fact was that, from the presence in their Lordships' House of four present or ex-Secretaries of State for India and of Lord Lawrence, they were particularly qualified to take part in such an investigation.—The Duke of ARGYLL said that the proposal of the Government to appoint a joint Committee of both Houses was one which could not be carried out unless by general assent, and it appeared that it did not meet with acceptance in the House of Commons. The question then arose whether it was desirable to have a separate committee in their Lordships' House. For his own part, he did not think that would be a convenient course. He thought there was no great necessity for any committee at all, and that the appointment of one by their Lordships at the present time would have an appearance of jealousy and antagonism towards the House of Commons. At the same time he regarded it as a great mistake to suppose that the House of Commons stood in the same position towards Indian as towards Home finance. That House represented the tax-payers of England, but they did not represent the tax-payers of India, and therefore the House of Lords were just as much entitled as they to legislate in reference to Indian finance. He could promise their Lordships that the Government would not take steps to carry out any recommendation of the Committee of the House of Commons which they might think of a doubtful character without giving that House an opportunity of instituting an independent inquiry.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, THURSDAY, March 2.—BRONZE FIELD GUNS.—Sir H. STORKS, in reply to Mr. B. OSBORNE, said that the manufacture of bronze guns had been temporarily suspended in consequence of certain defects in the castings. The committee were investigating the cause of these defects, but had not yet reported. In the meantime, they were making wrought-iron muzzle-loading guns with steel tubes.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, FRIDAY, March 3.—ENGINEERS' COLLEGE IN INDIA.—Mr. G. DUFF, in reply to Mr. DICKINSON, said that there would be no charge on the Indian revenues for the Engineers' College; the fees of the college would be in excess of the expenses. The cost would be £21,950; the fees would amount to £22,500, which would leave a balance of £550 to be paid to the Indian Government.

THE ARMY RETIREMENT SCHEME.—Mr. CARDWELL was understood to say, in reply to a question put by Major ANSON for Viscount Bury, that he had as yet no sufficient data on which to ascertain the probable annual cost of the contemplated scheme of retirement for officers in the army.

THE COLLEGE FOR INDIAN ENGINEERS.—Sir F. GOLDSMID called the attention of the House to the recent establishment, under the orders of the Secretary of State for India, of a college at Cooper's-hill, for the education and training of engineers for the Indian Civil Service, and pronounced it to be in direct violation of the sound principle of competition. It was quite true that all boys might compete for admission into the college, but when admitted they would have to pay £150 a year while in the institution. There were many boys whose parents could not afford to pay so large a sum for their education, and if the Government of India were determined to proceed with the college, they should not make it the sole medium of admission for engineers into the Indian service. The hon. baronet concluded by moving the following resolution: "That in the opinion of this House, young men qualified by character and attainments for admission into the service of the Government of India as civil engineers, ought not to be excluded from such service by reason of their not having been educated at a Government college." (Hear, hear.)—Mr. DICKINSON seconded the resolution, and in doing so complained that the Indian Government should have embarked on such an undertaking as the establishment of the college, involving an expenditure of £90,000, without due notice to Parliament. There was no provision for educating natives of India at this college; and he thought it was desirable to encourage the execution of public works by other than Government authority.—Mr. G. DUFF said that, in establishing an engineering college, the Government had done an act which was absolutely necessary for India, and extremely advantageous to England. For a number of years they had tried to obtain men in the open market, of British talent, but the experiment had proved a hopeless failure. In 1868 the Indian Government had forty appointments, and offered them to absolute and unrestricted competition. For these appointments fifty-nine persons only came forward, and out of the fifty-nine, only twenty-two were found sufficiently qualified to pass the minimum qualifying test.—Mr. WINTERBOTHAM: What was the pay?—Mr. GRANT DUFF: £240 a year. (Cries of "Hear, hear.") In 1869 there were seventy candidates, and only thirteen passed. (Cries of "What pay?") Hon. gentlemen seemed to think that it was the pay that was the cause—(hear, hear)—but the Indian Government thought it was due to other causes. In the course of their ten years' experience the Indian authorities had come to the conclusion that the kind of man they wanted was not produced at this moment by any existing institutions in Great Britain. The examinations for the entrance to the college would be entirely open and competitive. It was objected that £450 was too large a sum to ask for the three years' training and education of young men in the new engineering college; but he did not think it was too large compared with the amount of salary they would receive at the close of the three years, or with the sum which persons of the same class would have to pay in this country to become qualified civil engineers. It was proposed to give a salary of £420 to every candidate who passed the necessary minimum qualifying test, or could show that he was capable of performing the practical work of an engineer. It might be said that the Government ought to have waited until the Royal Commission which was inquiring into the nature and operations of the various scientific institutions in this country had made its report; but his answer was, that they could not afford to wait.—Mr. FAWCETT thought that the House would agree with him that the committee appointed to investigate Indian finance had not been appointed one hour too soon. (Hear, hear.) If a new expenditure like this were to be carried out without consulting Parliament, what was the use of going through the farce of discussing Indian finance? If the House of Commons was to have no will in the government of India, it should not have responsibility as it had not power. He hoped the hon. member for Reading would take the sense of the House upon his motion; for this was the proper time to consider whether Indian money should be spent for such a purpose in this country. The Under-Secretary complained of the failure of the old system of open competition; but it was not to be wondered at when the salary given to young men of high scientific attainments was £240 a-year, with permission to pay for their outfit. It might be supposed from the speech of the Under-Secretary that this college was an established success, and that some of the most brilliant engineers in Europe had been instructed under its roof. He thought they must wait to see whether all these anticipations had been realised, and whether Government could do things better than private institutions and private enterprise. In his opinion it would be better to have young men educated in Edinburgh, Dublin, or Owens College, Manchester, than in the proposed college

He felt sure that if such was the case, the educational institutions of the country would quickly adapt themselves to the examinations, however severe they might be, and there would be no lack of engineering talent whatever. The Under-Secretary had spoken of the great boon which had been conferred on the natives of India. He had heard it stated that after they had an engineering education, they found it uncommonly difficult to get employment, and many of them had been obliged to return to manual labour, and for the reason that the Government seemed not to have a dearth, but a surplus, of engineering talent.—Sir D. CORRIGAN thought that good results must arise from a discussion of this nature. It had been said that open competition had failed; and why? Because they had not given the price for the article that they ought to. With regard to Cooper's-hill College, it had been said that there was no monopoly. But, even if the examinations were perfectly fair, that college must, from its very nature, be a monopoly. He would not go so far as to say that the college should be altogether dispensed with. He thought there ought to be some compromise, and that there should be something more than a competitive examination, and that qualities of body as well as mind should be looked to.—Dr. L. PLAYFAIR did not wish to see this college entering into competition with the colleges of this kingdom. When he first heard of it he had fears of this. He had, however, learned by inquiries that this college instead of being an injury to them, would rather be an aid. He believed that the establishment of the college would be for the best interests of education throughout the country.—Mr. WINTERBOTHAM feared that, if the House did not take care, the Scotchmen would be too much for them. (Laughter.) For his part, he could not see what the college offered which could not be found in existing institutions—(hear, hear), and he wished to know who, either in England or India, would be the better for its establishment. (Hear, hear.)—Mr. GORDON assured the hon. member that his apprehensions were not well founded. Scotchmen were not unanimous on the subject of the college (Laughter.) For himself he entertained a strong feeling against it, and he found himself in this position—that, sitting on the Conservative side of the House, he had to oppose a monopoly promoted by a Scotch Liberal member, and supported by Scotch Liberal members. Government should wait to see what results the increased salaries offered to engineers would produce.—Sir J. LUBBOCK thought that the Government might accept the resolution of the hon. baronet the member for Reading, which expressed no opinion as to the establishment of the college, but simply declared that persons educated at other institutions should not be excluded from competing for the Indian engineer service.—Colonel SYKES protested against the establishment of the college as unfair to the natives of India.—Mr. MILLER said if the hon. member for Reading went to a division he should vote with him, as he considered the proposed engineering college would be unfair towards other institutions. He believed that the system proposed would prove a complete failure.—The CHANCELLOR of the EXCHEQUER said the question the House had to consider was that, having to spend £8,000,000 a-year in public works in India, whether it would be spent under the supervision of properly qualified engineers. The old system of open competition having signally failed, the Indian Government thought it would be well to qualify young men in this country for the engineering service. The system had the advantage of economy; for the necessary training could be given at a cheaper rate in this country than by sending out competent professors to India to give instruction in engineering. He did not believe that it was because of the smallness of the remuneration given that the system of competition had failed, and that so few candidates had offered themselves, but that the failure was owing to the immense number of technical subjects which entered into the examination, and which had the effect of defeating the object of competition. The only suggestion made by the opponents of the scheme was that they should provide for the engineering service of India by a system which had entirely broken down. It was the intention of the Government that no person should be admitted into the college, and, through the college, to the Indian service, except by competition. The amount of knowledge possessed by the competitors would also be inquired into; and, if satisfactory, they would be put through a course long enough to test their fitness for the actual work by the profession. The examination would be placed in perfectly independent hands, so that there would not be any suspicion raised that persons would be forced into institutions for the purpose of extracting money from them or of teaching them that which they already knew. There would be fair play, and no sort of bias would be sanctioned on the part of anyone. The system, he believed, was fair and honest, and had been well conceived for the purpose that it had in view. Under these circumstances he thought the motion might very well be dispensed with. (No, no.)—Dr. BALL said there were two kinds of education required—one mathematical and scientific, and the other practical and experimental. The first, he thought, might be taught in the universities better than in any other institution, whilst the second could only be acquired by actual experience or work. The students at the college now under discussion could not acquire both, and he considered there was no occasion for the expense which it was proposed to incur.—Mr. DALGLISH believed that greater experience was to be gained in England than in India, and that it would be better to send out qualified men to that country than go to the expense of educating them there. The House then divided, when there appeared: For the motion, 52; against, 46: majority, 6.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MONDAY, March 6.—THE ARMY REGULATION BILL.—Mr. CARDWELL moved the second reading of the Army Regulation Bill without a word, and Colonel LOYD LINDSAY at once rose to ask the House to declare that the expenditure necessary for the national defences and other demands on the Exchequer do not at present justify any vote of public money for the extinction of purchase in the army. The gallant colonel referred in detail to many matters connected with our military system not exactly included within the terms of his motion, and maintained that all that was wanted in the British army was reorganisation, while the abolition of purchase would impose a heavy burden upon the tax-payers, would deteriorate the character of our officers, and would destroy our regimental system.—In this view he was seconded by Colonel LUKE WHITE, who recommended not compulsory service, but compulsory drill of all the youth of the country as a more advisable measure of army reform than "trotting after the skirts" of Mr. Trevelyan, and devoting the public money to "the furtherance of a family mania."—Mr. DAVISON, the new Judge-Advocate-General, pointed out the evils and mischiefs of the purchase system. The abolition of purchase, he asserted, would not in any way interfere with our regimental system; and without the adoption of such a measure it was utterly impossible to reorganise the army.—Colonel C. LINDSAY maintained that purchase was a private arrangement, and declared that the money paid for its abolition would be a dead loss to the taxpayers; while Sir GEORGE GREY expressed a confident opinion that it was impossible for the Government to attempt to bring the regular army into union with the auxiliary forces without proposing such a measure as this. In the absence of purchase, however, it would be impossible to resort to a system of seniority, and we must have recourse to selection and compulsory retirement.—Captain STANLEY expressed himself as in the abstract a supporter of the abolition of the purchase system, but criticised the details of the Government measure, and expressed his disapproval of many of its most important provisions.—Mr. H. R. BRAND admitted that the system of purchase facilitated promotion, but comparing its evils with its advantages came to the conclusion that its maintenance was inexpedient, and that the best course would be for Parliament and the nation to make up their mind at once to the sacrifice necessary for its abolition.—Lord MAHON, on the contrary, gave an unqualified support to Colonel Lindsay's resolution.—Mr. MUNTZ strongly supported the abolition of the purchase system, but he was not so well satisfied with other provisions of the Bill.—Colonel GILPIN indulged in some criticisms upon the system of "control;" and declined to sanction the expenditure of several millions for the abolition of a system which he believed to be beneficial.—To Mr. C. BUXTON it was a matter of the deepest regret that he was compelled to separate himself from his friends upon this question; but as he believed that the abolition of purchase would not really democratise the army—which was not even now an aristocratic institution—he could not give his sanction to the enormous expenditure which it would involve.—There were some signs of hesitation about the commencement of Major ARBUTHNOT'S maiden speech, but the gallant member for Hereford struggled manfully with his difficulties, and speedily succeeded in explaining the reasons which induced him to oppose the second reading of the Bill.—Mr. HEADLAM was willing to pay the regulation prices; but recommended in place of the payment of over-regulation rates the adoption of promotion by seniority.—General HERBERT was not opposed to the abolition of the purchase system if fairly carried out; but warned the Government and the House that it would render necessary the establishment of a large and expensive scheme of retirement.—Mr. WHITBREAD strongly protested against Mr. Headlam's proposal to pay only the regulation prices; and when Captain TALBOT had delivered a successful maiden speech against the Bill, and in support of the regimental system, the debate was, on the motion of Lord ELCHO, adjourned till Thursday.

EAST INDIA REVENUE ACCOUNTS.—On the motion for resuming the adjourned debate on the report of the resolution in reference to the East India revenue accounts, Colonel SYKES moved their re-committal, on the ground that the statement which had been made to the House respecting them was not trustworthy.—After some observations from Mr. G. DUFF, the resolution was agreed to.

NOTICE OF MOTION.—Major ANSON gave notice that, in the event of the Army Regulation Bill passing the second reading, he should move that, in adopting any scheme of purchase, the vested rights and interests of officers should be respected.

Spirit of the Home Journals.

INDIAN ADMINISTRATION.

The Pall Mall Gazette remarks that one of the largest of those never-failing administrative questions which the progressive character of our rule in India constantly brings up for settlement is judicial organisation. Administrative officers have long watched with apprehension the gradual but systematic postponement by district officers of their executive to their judicial duties. This growing evil has long attracted the attention of the Indian Government. Some two years since evidence and opinions were collected throughout India on this subject, and as Mr. Stephen is known to have taken the matter up, direct action will probably follow at a very early date, and not before it is wanted. In point of fact, however admirably the compound or patriarchal system served its purpose in earlier days, India has now grown out of it. The so-called non-regulation provinces, where, in the golden age, district officers wholly innocent of legal trammels, but guided instead by pure intuition, performed their judicial functions for the great part in the saddle, or at the most held piepowder courts under the village tree, who scorned "cutcherries" as effete, and would have given but short shrift to the barrister within their borders—are now as rigidly regulated and as stringently controlled as any other part of the Empire, and the deputy commissioner who attempted nowadays to follow the precedents set him by Edwardes, Lake, and Nicolson would speedily find himself in very bad case indeed. The result is that you get neither a competent judge nor an efficient executive officer. The obvious remedy is the separation of judicial and executive functions. This seems easy enough to do, but it is not really so simple as it seems. The backbone of our system is the personal influence and power exercised by the magistrate or district officer over the people. He must represent in their eyes and be to them, in fact, the actual Government, and any measure which tends to lessen this position is self-condemned. But governors exercising no criminal jurisdiction, having no power to punish, in short, would soon come to be regarded as very feeble folk indeed, and their personal rule and authority would be hopelessly broken down. To take this power, therefore, from the hands of the executive officers—that is, to make a complete separation between judicial and executive functions—is out of the question, as it would lead directly to the very evil it is essential to avoid. The alternative is to make a division in the judicial functions, separating the civil from the criminal, and uniting the latter with executive work. The district officer, with his authority unimpaired, and his opportunities for work enhanced, would then be able to devote himself to his district duties with a vigour which for many years has been out of the question; while, on the other hand, the judge, relieved from the performance of a mass of miscellaneous duties, would be left free to bestow that necessary care and thought on the purely civil judicial work which it has never as yet received.

THE OPIUM REVENUE.

The Saturday Review observes that there is not a single item of the Indian Revenue which is not attacked by some school of English or Indian opinion. The Land-tax, the Salt-tax, the Income-tax, the Customs' Duties, have each their enemies; but unquestionably the most serious attack, and the one made by the most numerous and powerful adversaries, is the attack on the source of revenue which has just displayed so curiously its power for good or for evil. The movement which is gradually acquiring in this country the importance which it acquired in several American States is incidentally directed against Indian opium. Professor Jowett, in one of his recent lectures, told his London audience that Temperance, in the Greek sense, meant minding your own business. Temperance, in the English sense, means minding everybody else's business. The tendency of those who cannot practise self-command to call upon their neighbours to come and help them to command themselves, is certainly not a new phenomenon of human nature, since it had great influence over the rise of monasticism, but it is steadily changing into a passion for exercising one of the most selfish and least justifiable forms of tyranny. "Thou shalt not drink, lest I get drunk," is a commandment upon which an increasing number of Englishmen are bent on forming a legislation almost as stringent as that which the legislators of all ages have based on "Thou shalt do no murder," or "Thou shall not steal." One would have at first thought that the very notion of extending this rule to the smoking of opium by the Chinese would have produced a doubt as to the soundness of the rule itself. Is it really true universally that a man is morally the worse for indulging in a sedative or a stimulant? In order that you may be sure that it is true of the Chinese, you must first convince yourself that you understand what is their ordinary, every-day morality, and next, that you know what is the exact change made in that morality by smoking opium. Now, do the advocates for a Liquor-law know anything whatever about Chinese morality? Do they know what are the particular actions which a native of China thinks right and what are those which he thinks wrong? Are they quite certain that, when he is under the influence of opium, there is any change in his moral views, or that, if there is, it is not one which brings him nearer to the moral standard of the British householder? The members of Temperance Societies not only do not condemn but strongly approve of certain artificial stimulants. They distinctly consider that the drinking of tea or coffee promotes virtue. What grounds have they for denying that opium produces on Chinese morality the same effects as tea and coffee upon British morality? It is certainly possible that no such effects may be produced, but what do the Temperance people know about it?

TRANSMISSION OF INDIAN, &c., MAILS, VIA THE BRENNER PASS AND BRINDISI.

The several lines of mail communication through France being exposed, by the operations of the War, to sudden interruption, the Postmaster-General considers that it has become absolutely necessary to divert the course of the British Overland Indian Mails, and to send them, for the present, through Belgium and Germany, and over the Brenner Pass, to Brindisi.

As the mails despatched on Friday evening will only reach Brindisi, under existing arrangements, a short time before the departure of the Packet, the Supplementary Mails hitherto despatched on Saturday morning will be discontinued.—By command of the Postmaster-General.—General Post-office, October 19, 1870.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, February 18; Agra and Madras, February 16; Calcutta, February 25.

THE topic of the week is the progress of the movement against the Loshai raiders. By the 2nd February the whole of the 44th N.I. had reached Sylhet on their way to Cachar. In the course of the next ten days the same regiment had despatched two companies towards Monierkhall under Captain Lightfoot and Lieutenant Bourne. These were to go up the Sonai river in boats, while a third party was to march along the Bongkong Range to Loshai-Haut, on the same river, whence Mr. Edgar had been heard of on the 31st January, still ignorant of the raid and of his dangerous proximity to the raiders. A man from his camp going to Loshai-Haut was prevented from returning by the sight of a Loshai party bearing homewards baskets full of heads. Sookpilall however was still friendly at the beginning of February. The remainder of the 44th left Sylhet on the 9th February for Cachar. Of the 4th N.I. one company had gone to Narvarbund stockade, and another to Chargola in Sylhet. On the 3rd February 200 of the 43rd N.I. had reached Shillong. General Bourchier was at Cachar taking measures to secure Mr. Edgar's safety. Mr. Daly had managed to escape from Monierkhall where he had for a time been completely surrounded. The report of Mr. Bagshawe's death proved to be a mistake. According to the Deputy-Commissioner of Cachar, his district was already clear of Loshais. It was still however determined to maintain bodies of troops in watch along the frontier. As for the question of following up the retreating raiders, that would depend on uncertain conditions of weather; February being sometimes a rainy month in the Cachar Hills.

ON the real merits of the quarrel between the teaplanters of Cachar and the Bengal Government touching the defenceless state of the Cachar frontier, we have no sufficient means of forming an opinion. It is clear however that the recurrence of Loshai raids must go far to check the reviving prosperity of the unlucky planters, and it is certain that they think themselves unduly neglected by their rulers in the matter of police. They complain that the old system of disregarding their warnings and trusting to Providence has been steadily pursued since the date of the previous raid, and certainly the disasters caused by the last one give a certain colour to such complaints. It must be no joke to work a tea-garden exposed to a sudden rush of murderous savages hungering for plunder and human heads. Mr. Macfarlane, the brave defender of the Katlicherra estate, shows in his letter to the Friend of India the difficulties he had to struggle with even after a successful defence against two attacks. Ten of his coolies had been buried up to the 30th January, while others were missing, and at least one poor woman had been carried off. Nothing but the gallantry of his manager and assistant had saved a European lady and two children from perhaps worse than death. It took him some days to get his frightened coolies together, but so utter was their demoralisation from panic, that the mere rumour of Loshais being in the jungle caused another stampede. They had ultimately to be left in another garden until they should muster up courage to resume their old places. It is easy to see how seriously the prevalence of such fears among the coolies will hamper the future progress of tea-planting in Cachar; but the proper remedy is not quite so easy to discover.

THE story repeated by a Lahore paper, about the ruler of Yarkand having forbidden all merchants from going to Palampore, has been flatly contradicted by the Punjab Government. There is no truth whatever in the report, and so far nothing has happened to mar the commercial results of Mr. Forsyth's mission. That gentleman was on the point of coming home, his eyesight being still impaired. Dr. Cayley has also taken his furlough, and will probably be replaced by Mr. Shaw, who has twice made the journey to Yarkand, once with poor Hayward, and lately with Mr. Forsyth.

IN the Legislative Council on February 10 Mr. Cockerell's Bill to amend the law relating to subordinate Courts in Bengal was passed; Mr. Chapman brought in a Bill to relieve the encumbered estates of Talookdars in Broach, and Sir R. Temple introduced his Bill for the further amendment of the Consolidated Customs Act of 1863.

AMONG the latest arrivals at Bombay were Mr. G. Campbell, the new Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, and Mr. Clive Bayley, Secretary to the Indian Government, both of whom went on at once to Calcutta.

MR. H. HEWETT, of the Kandeish Local Funds' Department, has been acquitted of all the charges of corruption brought against him. Mr. Bayley, the presiding Judge, commented with much severity on the character of the evidence for the prosecution.

AMONG other items of latest news we may notice the intended construction of a floating bridge across the Hooghly, to be finished by 1873 for not more than £150,000; the subscription of £1,200 by the British Indian Association of Oudh to the Durand Memorial Fund; and the arrival of Mr. Seward at Madras on the 11th February.

ACCORDING to a recent telegram Sir R. Temple delivered his Financial Statement in the Legislative Council on the 9th of this month. It was divided, as usual, into three parts, relating severally to three financial years. For 1869-70 he gave the "actual" figures, which tally with those already disclosed to us by Mr. Grant Duff. That is to say, the actual surplus over an expenditure of £50,782,413 was £118,668. This of course takes no account of an "extraordinary expenditure" of £2,599,614, covered by loan. For the year ending March 31, 1871, Sir Richard gives us not the actual figures which have yet to be completely made up, but the nearest possible approach to them in the shape of "regular estimates," founded on actual returns made up to the end of February. From these it appears that the receipts for 1870-71 may be reckoned at £51,048,900, while the ordinary outlay is put down at £50,051,800, or £997,100 less than the year's revenue. A further sum of £1,146,800 represents the separate outlay on public works extraordinary, such as canals, state-railways, and so forth. The estimated surplus therefore for the year just ending was pretty accurately foreshadowed in the Under-Secretary's financial statement of February 24. For the year 1871-72 we get the first or "Budget Estimate" of £49,098,900 for receipts, against £49,005,500 for outlay, with an estimated surplus of £93,400. The extraordinary outlay is reckoned at £3,626,000, which will be covered by the balance of old loans and a new one, to be raised in England, of two millions and a-half. No loan, it appears, will be raised in India. The home expenditure for the year is set down at nine millions, and the grants to Local Governments from the Imperial treasury at 3¾ millions "for the provincial services." The Imperial grant for ordinary public works will amount to £2,333,000, and for extraordinary works to 3½ millions. This part of the telegraphic summary needs explaining, for the sum proposed by the Indian Government and declared by Mr. Grant Duff to have been set aside for local distribution was not 3¾ but 4¾ millions, which was to include all assignments for local public works. The Imperial grant of 2⅓ millions must refer to interest on guaranteed railways and other works of a strictly Imperial nature, the cost of which is to be defrayed out of income.

With regard to the Civil and Military Estimates, we are told nothing except that "some reductions are proposed in them." If the amount were anything considerable, we should not have been left to guess at it; or can it be that there is still a question as to the extent of the reductions proposed? The opium revenue is estimated at eight millions, a figure which seems moderate enough in comparison with the nine millions it was wont to yield before 1869, and not unreasonably high by reference to the actual yield for the last two years. We can only trust that the unexpected gain of nearly a million upon the Budget Estimate for opium in the year just ending will not be balanced by a corresponding loss in the coming year, especially as opium culture is rapidly increasing in Western China. The only change proposed in the taxation for 1871-72 concerns the income-tax, which will henceforth be reduced from 3½ to 1 per cent., while the level of assessment is to be raised from incomes of 500 to those of 750 rupees a-year. So far as it goes, we may look on this as a decided change for the better; but the best change of all would have been the total abolition of a tax which at the new rate may bring in about a million a-year at a moral cost out of all proportion to the material gain. A succession-duty would be quite as productive and far better suited to native habits and traditions.

In defending the income-tax Sir R. Temple raised "a slight laugh" among his hearers by observing that only one local Government, that of Bengal, had reported any cases of known oppression, and that these amounted only to thirteen. Sir Richard also pointed out that the number of incomes touched by the new scale of assessment would be reduced one-half. Among his two hundred hearers were the Chief of Jaipore, who left Calcutta the next evening, and Mr. Seward, the American ex-Minister, who was to start for Benares yesterday. The latter is said to have paid marked attention to the Budget statement, especially when opium was mentioned as the saving feature of the finances; the loss on home exchanges having been balanced by the great gain upon opium. It is said that Lord Mayo insists on sacrificing every item of avoidable outlay to the paramount need of preventing a deficit—that abiding bugbear of timid financiers. It would really be far wiser policy to spend twenty millions at once on necessary works for India than to waste probably half that sum by spending it in driblets of two or three millions a-year. The outside public of Calcutta are described as disappointed and suspicious with regard to the income-tax, but generally satisfied with the Budget figures and the new scheme of decentralised finance.

Now that the Indian Bonus Question is once more coming to the front, it will help perhaps to disabuse some minds of the erroneous impressions which still turn up in some leading journals, as to the illegality of the bonus system in the old Indian Army, if we reprint the opinion given a few years back by two eminent lawyers, Sir John Rolt and Mr. H. James:—

Ex Parte Lieut.-Col. A.B.—Two questions have been submitted to us. 1. Whether the payments which have been made by the officers in the Company's service under "the Bonus System" are legal or illegal? and, 2. If there be any means by which the officers who have made such payments can recover the sums paid by them? Upon the first question, the case of Græme v. Wroughton, 24 L.I. Ex. 265, is an authority that such payments are illegal, or rather the dictum of Mr. Baron Martin is to be so construed. The case itself did not directly determine the question involved. In that case an action was brought on a bond to secure the repayment of money lent, for the purpose of contributing to the fund to be paid to a retiring officer. A plea was pleaded, setting out some of the facts in this case, but alleging that the money was corruptly paid. To this plea there was a demurrer. Before the demurrer was heard, the issues of fact were tried. The learned judge at the trial held that the plea was not proved in fact, and without leaving any question to the jury, directed a verdict for the plaintiff. A motion for a new trial and the demurrer were argued together, and the Court of Exchequer, by its judgment, determined that if the averment in the plea were true, it was a good plea, and that therefore the issue raised upon it should have been left to the jury. A new trial was therefore directed. But the plea alleged that the transaction was a corrupt one, and, for the purposes of demurrer, this was of necessity assumed to be true. What would have been the judgment of the Court if these words had been struck out, or, if the jury had negatived them, as doubtless any jury would, is but a matter of conjecture. Even to the extent to which the case determines the question involved, we have grave doubts whether it would, on further consideration, be held to be good law. The tendency of the common law, and also of the statutes affecting the subject (24 Geo. III., c. 25; 33 Geo. III., c. 52; 49 Geo. III., c. 126) is to control the corrupt sale of offices and commissions. In this case, we doubt whether there has been any sale or transfer in the sense contemplated by the statutes. Neither in letter nor spirit does the retiring officer sell or transfer his commission. He receives a sum of money which is more in the nature of superannuation allowance than the price of a sale. In this case, also, what has occurred has been expressly sanctioned both by the Board of Directors and by the Governor-General of India. We presume that, in their judgment, no illegal act has been committed, and certainly their approval negatives all idea of the transaction having been corrupt. We incline, therefore, to be of opinion that if an opportunity occurs for reviewing the decision of the Court of Exchequer, the dicta in the judgment referred to will not be concurred in, and that "the Bonus System" will be held to be legal. It certainly must be so regarded in foro conscientiæ. We are of opinion that there is no remedy either at law or in a Court of Equity for those we are advising. There was no express contract with the Government, or any of its departments, and certainly those who received the money cannot be called upon to refund it. (Signed) John Rolt (now Sir John Rolt, Attorney-General).—H. James.

We might go yet further in the direction here indicated, and maintain with another lawyer, Mr. Rathborne, that even if the bonus given to a retiring officer were regarded in the light of a sale of his commission, it was such a sale as came directly under the exemptions specified in 49 George III., cap. 126. In this Act for the further prevention of the sale and brokerage of offices, it is expressly provided that nothing therein "shall extend to any purchases, sales, or exchanges of commissions in his Majesty's Forces under regulations made or to be made by his Majesty." Now, as every Indian officer held also a Royal Commission, and the bonus system was formally sanctioned by the Court of Directors writing in the name and with the full authority of her Majesty's Ministers on the Board of Control, it seems impossible to argue that a bonus transaction was anything but a lawful sale or bargain, carried out under a Regulation made by her Majesty, through her appointed representatives in this country and in India. There is really no room for shirking the manifest conclusion that a bonus system established under such conditions had the same legal force as the Purchase System in her Majesty's army.

THE LOSHAIS.

The recent inroads of Loshai or Kookie savages across the Cachar border ought to invite renewed attention to Captain Lewin's interesting essay on the Hill Tribes of Eastern Bengal. The Kyoungtha or children of the River, and the Toungtha or children of the Hills, are the distinguishing names of two sets of tribes more or less akin, who inhabit the hill ranges running northward from Arrakan to Assam, along the borders of Chittagong, Munnipore, and Cachar. The Kyoungtha are said to be of pure Arrakanese—that is Burman—origin, while the Toungtha seem to be more or less direct offspring of the aboriginal stock. A great many of the former tribes are known to have entered the Chittagong Hills from Arrakan about two generations back, and to their emigrations the Burmese War of 1824 was partly due. The Kyoungtha show their Mongolian origin in the yellow colour of their skins, while the Toungtha are dark and swarthy, and "more purely savage," possessing no written character, and speaking a language limited to the fewest and simplest words. Among the latter the men go nearly naked, and the women after marriage content themselves with a short petticoat only. Their religion is of the simplest; they are cruel and reckless of life, never greet each other, nor reverence their chiefs or elders, but have very great respect for an oath. They are monogamists, apt to make good husbands and fathers. Before marriage, as in Japan, unlimited license is allowed to the girls, but prostitution is unknown. To the Toungtha belong the Loshai or Kookie clans, many in number, but all speaking virtually the same language and following the same customs. Both men and women, says Captain Lewin, "are well-made and wonderfully muscular;" the former averaging five foot eight, the latter five foot four; with swarthy complexions, generally smooth cheeks, forbidding countenances, and lean bodies. Unlike most of the other hill tribes, "their faces bear no marks of Tartar or Mongolian descent." The men wear one long homespun sheet of cotton cloth, sometimes of fine texture, dyed blue with crimson and yellow stripes. Their hair is bound up into a knot on the nape of the neck. The women wear nothing but a narrow strip of blue cloth round their loins, and distend the lobes of their ears with large discs of wood or ivory. Both sexes delight in necklaces of large amber beads brought from Burmah, by which they set the highest store.

The top of a high hill is always chosen for the site of a Loshai village, which in war time is protected by a strong stockade. Every fifth year or so, when the surrounding land has been worked out, the village is removed to virgin ground. This is owing to the wasteful method of cultivation pursued by all these hill tribes. This process is call "joom." In April the "joomah" goes into the forest, picks out, if he can, a spot densely covered with bamboos, and proceeds to clear it with his dao or large knife. In May the felled timber is dry enough to set on fire. Its ashes manure the burnt soil, and when the first signs of coming rain appear, the whole village goes forth laden with mixed seeds of cotton, rice, melons, pumpkins, yams, and Indian corn, which are cast into little shallow holes made with the dao. Each man then proceeds to build him a loghut on his own clearing. Very little care is needed for the crops, which seldom suffer unless from excessive rains. Between July and October the several crops are gathered. A "joom" thus cleared needs eight or ten years to bring back the old growth of underwood before it can be cleared again. Hence it takes still fewer years to exhaust all the suitable land around one village. Proper tillage with the plough these savages abhor, even when their usual means of subsistence fail them for a time.

Chief among their domesticated animals are the guyal and the hill-goat. The former, of which nearly every house keeps one tethered to its door, is a magnificent beast "resembling nothing so much as the Chillingworth wild cattle magnified." It is kept by the Loshais not for milking, but for slaughter at sacrifices or grand feasts. The goats have long shaggy coats of pure white hair, almost sweeping the ground. Almost every house likewise keeps a pet pig, which runs loose, and fattens wonderfully on what it finds. Being great flesh eaters, the Loshais lay traps for wild deer, pigs, bears, and other game; but their favourite game is the wild elephant, which they hunt in large parties, armed of late years with guns of English make. Their constant wars among themselves are sometimes varied by raids into British ground for the purpose of carrying off slaves. Their whole art of war consists in surprises—not at all a bad principle even for civilised warfare. They will march immense distances in four or five days to reach the village on which they mean to burst by a sudden attack in the night. They can make a rough kind of gunpowder, and have learned to repair their gunlocks among other essays in ironwork; but the gun-barrels are beyond them. Of pottery they know nothing, using gourds and leaves for plates and bottles when they cannot obtain brass or earthen vessels from their Bengallie neighbours. They use no money except for buying goods at the frontier markets. On the death of a housefather, the corpse, dressed in its finest clothes, is placed sitting in the middle of the house, his guns and weapons on the right, his widow on the left. A big feast is prepared for his friends, who also offer him food and put a pipe of tobacco between his lips. The Howlong Loshais, instead of burying the corpse on the second day, hang it up to the house-beams for a whole week, during which the widow has to sit underneath without stirring from her spinning-wheel. If her friends fail to bring her food, the poor woman must starve on the spot. Another clan keep the dead body dried for six months, so that all the dead man's friends and kinsfolk may have time to come and take farewell of him.

PRINCE KASSAI'S ENVOYS.

The tender and quite disinterested regard we always profess to feel for the welfare of our Indian dependency has just been illustrated in a very suggestive way. It must be very comforting to the people of India to find that after all we never forget them when there is any chance of turning their good offices to our own especial advantage. There are some people whose chief happiness consists in sacrificing themselves for the good of others. If the natives of India belong to this class, they ought to be very unhappy at the opportunity they have just been losing for the exercise of that self-denial which the strong are always ready to teach the weak. At the moment when they themselves were bowed down with the weight of new taxes imposed in payment of debts which their English masters did them the honour to run up on their behalf, it would have set the crown to their past sacrifices if they could have come forward to relieve those masters of other burdens in whose removal they had much less apparent interest. Remembering how handsomely India contributed to the entertainment of a Turkish Sultan, and to various other demands of like pertinence upon her accommodating purse, we are not surprised to learn that England was quite ready to help herself from that same quarter on the next inviting occasion. According to the revelations made last Friday in the House of Commons, such an occasion turned up a few months ago, when certain envoys from our old friend Prince Kassai of Abyssinia reached Suez, laden with presents —since valued at £1,500—for her Britannic Majesty. From Suez they went on to Alexandria, and there they tarried pending the reference which Colonel Staunton made to his own Government touching their future proceedings. Eventually the presents were forwarded to their destination; but the envoys, after a stay of several months in Egypt, have had to return home without seeing the country to which they had been sent.

How this happened, we know from the mouth of Lord Enfield himself. These gentlemen, if they came on to England, would have to be treated as Royal guests. That would cost something —possibly a few hundred pounds—and who so fit to undertake the burden as the home representatives of the Indian Government? What the Indian Government has to do with Prince Kassai we have failed to discover; but anyhow to the India Office "application was made upon the subject." Unluckily for the envoys, the Secretary for India met the cool proposal with a simple reference to India's poverty. There were "no funds available" in that direction. The milch cow had most inconveniently run dry for the present. No question appears to have been raised as to the justice of asking India to pay the travelling expenses and hotel bills of people with whom she has not the slightest concern. But it was clear that somebody would have to pay the bill, and why not India as well as England? India has long been used to these little impositions, and what is the good of a great dependency if it cannot now and then save a few pounds to its master's pockets? Poverty however was no doubt the safest plea for putting off an unpleasant demand in this instance. When a too pressing acquaintance wants you to lend him another trifle of a few pounds, the simple assurance that you have not the money at hand saves all necessity for arguing the moral point.

An appeal was then made, it seems, to the Treasury; but that department, having small excuse for pleading poverty, rejected the appeal on moral grounds. It would not be right, they said, to use Imperial funds for such a purpose. We hope the people of India will appreciate the delicacy of those moral scruples which could see no harm in extracting money under false pretences from the Indian exchequer, but which are shocked at the notion of coming down on the British taxpayer for the means of discharging a national duty. "Let us be moral," exclaim the Pecksniffs of the English Government, in bland unconsciousness of the wrong they purposed doing the moment before. It is right, we suppose, to pay one's debts with money filched from other people, but if the wherewithal cannot be thus obtained, honour forbids our paying them out of our own pockets! Such at least is the construction we are forced to place on Lord Enfield's statement of what was left undone in the matter of these envoys. If their reception in this country was not to be a rightful charge upon the Imperial funds, we should be glad to know from what more fitting source the money for such a purpose ought to have been drawn. Whoever else was bound to show proper courtesy to the delegates of a prince who had also proved himself our good friend in need, no one could seriously maintain the duty of the Indian Government to take the burden in this case upon its own shoulders.

To us indeed it seems that policy and gratitude alike commanded what justice certainly did not forbid. The people of England would hardly have begrudged an outlay of a few hundred pounds in honour of a prince whose services to England in the campaign against Theodore are still fresh in their memories, whose will to help our countrymen was yet more recently shown in his efforts to avenge the murder of Mr. Powell, and whose envoys were bearing hither some costly tokens of their master's gratitude to the nation which had delivered him from the fear of his worst foe. It would have cost a mere trifle to send these men home again well pleased with their English entertainers, and duly impressed with the more salient features of Western civilisation and British greatness, as compared either with the barbarism of Abyssinia or the thin-coated civilisation of Egypt. But moral scruples have been made the cloak for an act of needless discourtesy. Her Majesty has received the presents, but the bearers missed the welcome that ought to have been granted them in their master's name. By way of an appropriate finish to all this blundering, Prince Kassai's own letter remains unanswered, or did remain so last Friday; for only the day before had the Government succeeded in getting it translated. It was so "difficult to decipher" that the reading of it took more than a month, from the 5th of February, the day of its actual receipt! But remembering the eighteen months during which poor King Theodore's letter lay unanswered and unheeded, we may congratulate Prince Kassai on his good fortune in the chance of getting an answer in about as many weeks.

BONUS COMPENSATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

Sir,—As to Mr. Cardwell's plan for reorganising our military defences, in so far as it regards the grant of compensation to officers of the Royal Army for the extra regulation money paid by them for their commissions, while Government is ignoring the sum paid by the Company's officers towards bonuses, it is the most monstrous specimen of class legislation I ever heard of. For see how the matter stands. The Company's officers invested their money on the strength of a despatch of the Court of Directors, concurred in by the President of the India Board on the part of the Crown, and published in General Orders of the Government of India to the Indian Army, wherein they were expressly invited and encouraged to do so, on the ground of the great advantage it would be to the public service.

The Queen's officers, on the other hand, paid the extra regulation money under no such sanction, but, on the contrary, in direct violation of an Act of Parliament passed expressly to put an end to the practice, and the provisions of which are of the most stringent nature. They are to the effect that any officer paying anything beyond the regulation price shall forfeit his commission and be cashiered; and that as an encouragement to persons informing of such acts, they shall be entitled to half the value of the commission so forfeited, provided such half value does not exceed five hundred pounds. It also enacts that all who have aided or assisted them shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanour.

While, again, the practice in the Indian Army has been declared by counsel of eminence, Mr. James, Q.C., and Sir John Rolt, to be legal, there is not a member of the Four Inns of Court who would dream of setting his hand to the opinion that the practice in the Royal Army was anything but utterly unlawful. It is true the law has not been enforced; but neither till lately was the law against Sunday trading.

I do not mean to argue from this that the law should be enforced, and that instead of getting compensation these gentlemen should now be brought to a court-martial; but what I do say most emphatically is, that if gentlemen whose claims are of that nature are to be compensated for what they will lose if the purchase and sale of commissions be abolished, how much more strong is the claim of the Indian officers!

So strong is it, indeed, that I cannot help thinking that if Mr. Cardwell's proposition be taken as the text, it would not be difficult to put the matter in such a light as to leave the Government now no alternative but doing justice to the Indian officers, or subjecting themselves to the disgraceful imputation of meting out their measures of compensation according to the Parliamentary influence of those they have to deal with. For if the grant of so many millions as compensation for what they have paid above the regulation to the Queen's officers be only what is right and proper, then the refusal of the couple of hundreds of thousands or less that would be required to compensate the Company's officers is an act of the most flagrant and scandalous injustice; if, on the other hand, these had been rightly treated, then the gift to the Queen's army can only be construed as a corrupt arrangement to buy their votes and those of their friends in the Lords and Commons, and so procure a sanction for the Government's Army scheme, which it knows would otherwise have been withheld from it.

Viewing the matter in this light I think Mr. Cardwell's scheme ought to be taken quite as a God-send by the Indian officers. For I hold it quite impossible, if they will only be stirring, that compensation for the money illegally invested in extra regulation purchase can be sanctioned in Parliament and the country for the Royal officers, and at the same time compensation for the loss of money invested in bonuses by the Company's officers, under the express sanction of the Government of India, be withheld from them. A Barrister.

PROPOSAL FOR A NEW HINDI BIBLE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

Sir,—I venture to suggest that the marriage of her Most Gracious Majesty's daughter with the son of the Secretary for India might be commemorated in a most becoming manner by her Majesty's commands to revise the translation of the Bible into the Hindwee language.

This language is spoken by upwards of thirty millions of her Majesty's subjects in India, in Rajpootana, in the North-West Provinces, in Oudh, Behar, Bughelkund, and Bundlekund. It is wonderfully adapted for translations from the Greek; it is founded on the Sanskrit, which answers Greek as face answers face in a glass.

Unfortunately, it has been supposed that the work of translation can be undertaken by Missionary and Bible Societies without the aid of Government, our God-fearing nation forgetting that the missionaries are, or ought to be, fully occupied with other work, with teaching the young and preaching to the old; forgetting, too, that the work of translation is exceedingly expensive, and its power to convert is not immediately apparent. Subscribers to Missionary Societies would object to see enormous sums expended without quick result.

The duty of her Majesty's Government to give her Indian subjects access to the sacred fountains of Divine truth was officially declared by Lord Wellesley seventy years ago, but this duty has been hitherto neglected as far as concerns her subjects who speak the Hindwee language. The existing translations are very imperfect, as might be supposed, considering that one of the most respected of the translators was throughout life ignorant both of Greek and Hebrew.

It is my belief that not a single man among the millions speaking Hindwee would object to the expenditure of public money out of the Education Fund for a translation, and it would be easy to show what retrenchments might be made without necessitating further taxation.—Yours faithfully, T.

NATIVE OFFICIALS AND EUROPEAN MAGISTRATES.

The Times of India remarks that the most accomplished jurist of the day may "consolidate" our laws into the most concentrated essence of justice and wisdom; we may commission all our revenue officers as educational inspectors, and may appoint vaccinators in every gaum; but in the last resort, and at every turn where our officers come in contact with the people, the "medium" is the illiterate native police sepoy, now dignified in this presidency by a title that must baffle his own pronunciation, that of "assistant constable." Next are the chief constables; and then come the "inspectors," potentates who are a terror, not only to evil-doers, but also to a good many simple honest people. On the discretion and integrity of these men our collectors and magistrates must largely depend for the execution of their best considered directions; and these third grade police officers, together with the Mamlutdar, may become, and very often are, the sole interpreters to the Mofussil population of that admirable system of law and beneficent administration which we pride ourselves on having given to the people of India. From this point of view it is not easy to overrate the importance of these custodians of the British Sirkar's reputation. If they are not well kept in hand, if their outgoings and incomings are not thoroughly well understood by the commissioned and covenanted officers immediately responsible for their conduct, an all but impenetrable screen may fall between Government and the masses. When these inspectors are clever, and apparently trustworthy, a district officer may be forgiven for regarding them as invaluable; but if he trust them implicitly, he may be kept in total ignorance of the very things most important for him to know—amongst the rest, the bearing of the two lower grades toward the people—and both revenue officers and courts may be grievously misled. In connection with the administration of the criminal law, the power which these inspectors may wield is sometimes sufficient to baffle or prejudice all the judicial hierarchy above them. If the next two links above them consist of officers whose command of the vernacular of the district is in any way defective, they get the ball into their own hands, and give it a propulsion which it is pretty sure to retain. It is all very well for Session Judges and their superiors in the High Court to be scrupulous about laws of evidence, but if the evidence is tainted at the source, the ensuing tangle is difficult to be unravelled. In the usual course of appeals, only the papers are perused; and if a new trial is ordered, the tutored witness is secretly placed under more dread penalties than before to make him stick to his story. The Collector and Magistrate may himself examine all the important witnesses; he may take all the formal depositions "in open court," that is, in the tent or bungalow of a brother Magistrate, and yet he may take down little else than fabrications, perversions, and exaggerations. He does all this in perfect good faith. The "red eye" of the police is not seen by him in the well controlled, intelligent countenance of his trusted inspector; while that fiery particle is not only seen, but felt by the witness who has passed through grievous tribulation, which defies the practised eye of a medical man to trace its effects. It is felt also by the wretched prisoner who, overtaken perhaps in a slight fault, shivers with conscious guilt, while he has to listen to an artfully arranged and deeply inculpating confession dictated to him at a time and in scenes of which the Court can have no cognisance.

IRRIGATION IN ORISSA.

The Englishman thinks the public will scarcely believe what is only too apparent from the letters of the Commissioner of Cuttack, that last year the province was on the brink of another famine, almost as terrible as the memorable one of 1865-66. There are, too, several paragraphs in the correspondence which seem to show that the Government of India and the Secretary of State were, till recently, quite as fully impressed as the local officials with the necessity of carrying out the Orissa irrigation scheme to completion. The Secretary of State for India writes in his despatch of the 6th January, 1869:—"It would be superfluous on my part to dwell on the necessity of pressing forward the Orissa undertaking with all practical expedition. With that necessity your Excellency has in your recent correspondence shown that you are deeply impressed." This "deep impress" has unhappily worn off, and been succeeded by an indifference so profound that the present Governor-General can now write without compunction: "The Governor-Governor in Council can only sanction the prosecution of the work as a relief work, and on the understanding that the wages to be paid shall only afford a mere subsistence to the labourers, and that nothing is done to encourage labour to come to the works, except to the extent necessary to provide such employment as will secure the district in which the work is undertaken from severe distress." It would be ludicrous, were it not lamentable, to observe the utter confusion of cause and effect in this observation. There is abundant proof in the letters of the Commissioner and the local officials on this subject, that the completion of the irrigation canals is the only possible security against famine in this province. That failure of crops, owing to the peculiarity of the climate, must constantly occur, and that a very possible coincidence of failure of crops in different parts of the country will inevitably, until the intercommunication system has been effected, produce results similar to those of 1865-66 is perfectly clear, and the local revenue officers urge with the most inflexible persistence the completion of these works to insure the province against the constant possibility of universal famine, while the Lieutenant-Governor has supported this demand with all the weight of his experience and judgment. Nevertheless, the Government of India refuses to allow works which are to prove a safeguard against famine to be proceeded with, until famine has actually commenced; or what else can we understand by the intimation that a bare subsistence only is to be afforded to the workmen? Surely the Government must be aware, now that the difficulty of procuring coolies even at high prices is one of the problems of these times, that no labourers in this country will work for a bare subsistence unless compelled by hunger. It is monstrous that the reasoning which might very fairly apply to such relief works as the building of jails and barracks should be adopted in the case of undertakings which are avowedly intended to render relief works unnecessary. The only possible alternative to famine is the completion of the intercommunication and irrigation works. But the Governor-General in Council, unlike most people, seems to prefer the amelioration of an evil after it has occurred, to the prevention of that evil altogether. We have heard of certain needy apothecaries who had a happy knack of administering such medicines as removed the more urgent symptoms of the disorder, but still kept the patient under their hands. The following paragraph from the Governor-General's letter, dated February 22, 1870, certainly looks at first sight somewhat in keeping with our illustration:—"Until the Governor-General receives the necessary assurances as to the future probable financial results of the works to the north of the Brahminee River, he cannot give any general sanction to their prosecution." It is most unfortunate that the Government of India, so lavish of capital on public works from which no immediate or indeed ultimate pecuniary return is expected, should apply the narrowest rules of political economy to a scheme which has for its object nothing less than the preservation of a province for all future time against general famine.

Bengal.

THE HORNETS OF THE NORTH-EASTERN FRONTIER.

Let us next briefly summarise the history of these hills for the last ten years, and of the raids committed by the tribes there dwelling. To take the Chittagong side first. In January, 1860, five hundred Loshais, under Ruttun Poea, their chief, swept across the north of our hill tracts, burst into the plains of Tippera, burnt fifteen villages, butchered one hundred and eighty-five British subjects, and carried captive one hundred souls. In those days we avenged the slaughter of our people where we could, and precisely one year afterwards a body of military police, under Captain Raban, penetrated to Ruttun Poea's village, and inflicted considerable chastisement on him and on his tribe. This policy of vigour brought its own reward. It was followed by the unconditional submission of the chief; and the subsequent establishment of a chain of police posts has ever since kept the hill tracts north of the Kurnafoolie free from raids. Ruttun Poea has continued friendly. He has given information from time to time of raids contemplated by his neighbours the Howlongs and Syloos. He dare not render more active help owing to the exigencies of his own position. And naturally enough he does not scruple to intrigue in order to maintain his advantage as the sole medium of communication between us and the other Loshais near him. These Loshais, chiefly Howlongs, as well as the more southern and still more warlike Shindoos, have raided frequently on the south of our hill tracts, where the population is spare, and the police posts few and far between. The whole of these tracts is indeed a confused jumble of broken hills and ravines covered with the densest jungle, where the only paths are the beds of torrents. The climate is for three-fourths of the year deadly to the natives of the plains, and posts can only therefore be maintained during the cold season. Their effect is at best rather moral than practically formidable. Many attempts have been made to cultivate amicable relations with the Howlongs and Syloos. The greater number of their chiefs swore not long since oaths of friendship with Captain Lewin, the superintendent of the hills, but the Howlongs have always been insolent in manner and frequently in active hostility, while the Syloos have been more open to conciliatory overtures.

Turning now to the Cachar frontier, we find that the Loshai tribes north of the waterpent are divided apparently into two sets, the one living on the upper waters of the Dullessur, the other approached by the valley of the Sonai. In 1862 (to pass over all previous outrages) Sukpilal, a chief of the western section on the Dullessur, made a savage raid upon Hill Tippera, and on villages lying in the south-east corner of Sylhet. For four years desultory attempts were made by the local officers in Cachar to ascertain Sukpilal's precise position, and to open communications with him. It was thought possible that he had not intended to attack British territory, and that he would on demand surrender the captives, and give pledges of his future good behaviour. Negotiation failing, police were in 1866 got together for a punitive expedition, but the difficulty of penetrating to an uncertain goal through an unknown country led to its abandonment. The Loshais had clearly, so far, no cause to repent of their evil deeds. The policy of 1866 was not in this instance one of vigour, but years had been lost in tracing the offenders. In December, 1868, Sukpilal again raided in Tippera and Sylhet, and on January 15, 1869, Loshais burnt the tea-houses at Loharbund in Cachar, and attacked Monierkhal. The Cachar raiders were supposed to be of the Sonai tribes, but were probably acting in concert with Sukpilal. To punish these outrages, a great military expedition was taken in hand. Three columns were to enter the Loshai country, one by the Sonai valley, one by the Dullessur, and the third from Sylhet through the Tippera Hills. The Sylhet attack eventually dwindled to police reconnaissance. This party marched through the hills till it got close to Sukpilal's villages, and there finding itself in hot quarters, fired upon, and unsupported, it very wisely came away again, rapidly. The Dullessur column was the main attack, and to uphold its dignity and ensure success it waited for guns, and elephants, and grenadiers, until the rains were just about to begin; it then marched a few miles into the hills, got very wet, and came back again, re infecta. The Sonai party was more persevering and somewhat more successful; it got up to some Loshai villages, but not being certain who were the guilty parties, it frightened the neighbourhood generally by firing a few rounds in the air, accepted conciliatory chickens from the chiefs around, and returned covered with glory and mud to Cachar. Up to this point, again, the results seem to be that the Loshais may have been a little scared, but had not yet been hurt or punished for their repeated misdeeds. We must remember that they know but very little of us or of our power; that, like all ignorant savages, they have great ideas of their own prowess, and the majority of them have good reason to believe in the inaccessibility of their present sites. In view of this state of things, the local officers and the local Government urged strongly upon the Government of India the propriety of sending into the country a carefully organised expedition at the very commencement of the next cold weather, not necessarily to burn and slay, but to convince the tribes of our power to punish, and to open up communications with Chittagong. It was suggested that permanent security could not be looked for until we had treated the Loshai tract as the Garo Hills and Khasiah Hills had been treated, by placing an English officer with a strong guard in the midst of it, and doing away entirely with the anomaly of allowing a hostile and savage strip of highlands to intervene between two British districts. The Supreme Government would not, however, hear of an expedition. It declared itself, according to the Administration Report, "averse on principle to move bodies of troops and armed police even in limited numbers, in order to effect reprisal for outrages on any part of our extended frontier." Another policy was now to be tried. The Loshais were to be taken in hand by a special officer, but his influence was to be based on conciliation and not on respect. He was to lead by love, not govern by salutary fear. Now in savage countries, conciliation is too often only the Latin equivalent for rum and rupees. In the case of the Loshais, we believe, it eventually involved gifts of green pyjamas. It means, in short, cozening where we cannot compel.

There is much to be said for the view of the case taken by Lord Mayo's advisers. The difficult nature of the country, the uncertainty of our being able to inflict adequate retribution to produce any lasting effect, were strong reasons for discountenancing an expedition. But if the Loshais were beyond the reach of punishment, they were also beyond the pale of negotiation. The Government, however, thought otherwise. Mr. Edgar, the Deputy Commissioner of Cachar, to whom some of the Sonai chiefs had, when fearing an expedition, sent messengers, was directed to visit the hills with a guard, and endeavour to establish amicable relations with the tribes. What the results of Mr. Edgar's mission really were, and how the geographical information acquired by his companion, Major Macdonald, has improved our position and ability to punish for the renewed outrages of the present year, we must enquire hereafter. It is, however, only too apparent that such overtures, coming after such marked failures to coerce, were open to the most fatal misconstruction.—Calcutta Observer.

STATION TALK.

Lucknow, Feb. 3.—The Saugor Light Field Battery in course of relief arrived here the day before yesterday, and resumed their march yesterday morning en route for Fyzabad, which station they will reach by the 8th current.—A grand marriage procession took place the other day; the happy man was the son of the ex-King of Oude's eldest brother, Nawab Mustapha Ali Khan Bahadoor, and the bride the grand-daughter of Mulkah Jehan, widow of King Mahomed Ali Shah, whose great Imambarruh stands at Hoosainabad, a magnificent building on which no less than twenty lacs of rupees were spent, and which twice in the year is grandly illuminated.—The 7th Native infantry from Assam marched into cantonments yesterday with fifes and drums playing at the head of the corps; the regiment looks a smart one, but I am informed is not strong, mustering only about 550 bayonets.—A very interesting case will be tried to-morrow in the Commissioner's Court, involving the rights and titles of a certain family whose name it would be premature to mention in this communication; in the event of my going to the court I will try and obtain full particulars for publication in the Delhi Gazette.—We are to have an Inspector of Post-offices in Oude as in the Central Provinces; all I can say is that the present Post-master of Agra, Mr. Donald Mackenzie, has a stronger claim to the appointment than any other incumbent in the department. Mr. Mackenzie came to Lucknow soon after the re-occupation of this large city in 1858, and was here for a period of nearly thirteen years, and always conducted his duties in a manner that gave universal satisfaction to the community; it would be gross injustice if his strong claims are not to be taken into consideration and he be superseded by a junior in the postal department.—The Financial Commissioner's duties are performed at present as a temporary arrangement by Mr. Capper. On the arrival of Mr. Charles Currie this officer will assume charge of the office, and the former gentleman will revert to his post of Commissioner of the Baiswarah or Roy Bareilly Division.—The weather still keeps cloudy, and a strong westerly wind has been blowing the last three days, much to the disgust of all.—I am glad to state that the students of the Canning College are making favourable progress under their Principal, Mr. Boycott, who is held in estimation by the boys who attend the College. Mr. Boycott formerly belonged to the La Martiniere College.

Bareilly, Feb. 5.—While every other class of society has its panegyrists or its detractors, there is one, and by no means an unimportant section of it, which is so silent in its activity, so unobtrusive in its good works, that the general public seems scarcely to recognise its existence, and yet in Bareilly at least the American Missionaries should fill a large space in the eye of the community. In the sectarian labours of these good people I can of course feel no personal interest, nor would they probably be gratified by any praise that I might be disposed to give them on this account, since they look to a different reward for their labours. But the field for their spiritual duties is apparently too limited for their active minds, and their superfluous energies accordingly find a suitable direction in the maintenance of some secular institutions which are of so much benefit to the public that there may be no impropriety in my noticing them. Imprimis, we are indebted to them for an Industrial school, the workers in which consist mainly of the orphan and other destitute children made over to the Missionaries during the late famine. This school supplies almost every conceivable manufacture in wood, iron, cotton and wool; and while the prices are as low as any in the market, the quality as to material and workmanship is vastly superior, except in the rare instances when the subordinates are allowed to pass out any work without the previous inspection of the Missionary Superintendent. The most elaborate European designs in cabinet work, carpeting, towelling, &c., are very skilfully executed, and in this respect of course the mere native workman has no chance in a competition with them. The benevolent object with which the Industrial school has been established of fitting for honest and independent means of livelihood the orphans thrown upon the charity of the Mission, entitles it to the hearty support of the public, and the call for this support will, I am sure, be more widely responded to by a little attention to the hint I have thrown out. Another of the institutions connected with the American Mission is a medical school for the instruction of native females, under the able management of Miss Swain, herself a duly constituted M.D. of some American university. Of the success of this institution it would be premature it its present stage to offer an opinion, but whatever the proficiency which its pupils may ultimately obtain, of so much practical good we may at least be certain, that the mere training will give them much resource in times of emergency, and so contribute greatly to their usefulness among those with whom their future lot in life may be cast. Of Miss Swain's individual efforts in the cause of good there is more however, to be said. She already enjoys among all classes the reputation inseparable from a high professional skill, and being of course peculiarly qualified for the treatment of patients of her own sex, has an almost exclusive constituency among them. By the natives especially she is regarded as a Heaven-descended benefactress, for she has been the means of saving many a life which their obstinate prejudices would have given up to certain death rather than expose the patient to the visit of a practitioner of the other sex.—A short notice of another female medical school on a larger scale would not be out of place here; it is established in connection with the dispensary, and is under the supervision of the Civil Surgeon. The girls in the school read English and Oordoo for some time, and then begin to study medicine after they become a little familiar with these languages. Three of the pupils have already qualified themselves for the office of female native doctors, and have obtained certificates to the effect from a Deputy Inspector General of Hospitals more than a year ago. But they have not yet left the school, and are expected to be very useful to society when they do so, and follow the profession which they have been trained to with so much care. All who visited the institution professionally or otherwise have been extremely pleased, and his Honour the Lieutenant Governor, on his last visit to Bareilly in May 1870, visited the school, and declared that he was not only pleased but astonished. The whole credit for the success of the institution is due to the exertions of Dr. Corbyn, Civil Surgeon, and Baboo Balie Chunder Sen, Sub-Assistant Surgeon. On the 28th of January last the anniversary of the Bareilly Brahmo Somaj was celebrated at the premises of Baboo Keshub Chunder Mookerjy. The Reverends Messrs. Scott and Thomas, of the American Methodist Church, and four American ladies of the same mission, were present on the occasion, and a large number of native gentlemen. The proceedings on the whole, I hear, were satisfactory. Dr. Archer, Deputy Inspector General of Hospitals, Oude and Rohilkund division, came in on the 31st ult., and inspected the jail, the Lunatic Asylum, the Police hospital and the dispensary; in the last he examined the female medical school, and was highly satisfied. He left this on the evening of the same day. A European capitalist has lately joined the station, with the intention of settling here, and is investing largely in house property. A number of houses belonging to the American Mission have already been purchased by him, and report credits him with wealth enough to buy up every building in the station. Tenants should have a care against the establishment of a monopoly in this branch of business, as rents are already somewhat high. The Commission of the division has not yet returned to head-quarters.—Delhi Gazette Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

Civil Service Furlough Rules.—A new edition of the Covenanted Civil Service Furlough Rules, including all the amendments and rulings of Government on the subject since they were first passed, is published in the Gazette of India for Feb. 11.

Absence of Dr. Cayley.—Dr. H. Cayley, resident at Leh, has obtained leave of absence for twenty months; and it is reported that Mr. Shaw, who lately accompanied Mr. Forsyth to Yarkund will officiate as resident during the doctor's absence.

The Bishop's Visitation Tour.—The Bishop of Calcutta wil start on his annual visitation tour on the 17th of March next, for Jamalpore, from whence he will proceed to Benares, Allahabad, and Lucknow. Afterwards he will visit Mussoorie, where he will make a stay for some time, paying visits from thence to Roorkee, Landour, Dehra, and Chuckrata.

Reported Fire at Port Blair.—According to the Rangoon Gazette, the master of the British baque William Stewart (a vessel lying at the mouth of the river) reports that he left Port Blair some twenty-five days ago, and that an extensive conflagration had occurred there, which, he says, has destroyed property to the value of Rs. 80,000. The barracks are said to have been entirely destroyed. Up to the present moment no official confirmation of these tidings has reached the local Government.

The N. W. Provinces Gazetteer.—The Pioneer says:—"Mr. E. T. Atkinson, c. s., has been deputed to Allahabad to bring out the much-talked-of and much-needed Gazetteer of the N. W. Provinces. The period allotted for the task is one year, but if the Gazetteer is really published within that time its appearance will be nothing short of a miracle. Dr. W. W. Hunter, who has been transferred, is, we presume, to be editor in chief of this and other provincial Gazetteers.

Colonel Strachey.—A correspondent at Calcutta writes as follows to the Times of India:—"It may interest you to hear that Colonel Strachey has been appointed the agent in England for the purchase of all stores, stock, and what is not required for the State railways in India. It is computed that a fabulous sum will thus be saved, and I am quite prepared to hear that a decided benefit has been realised by the arrangement. I believe Colonel Strachey will not leave this till the general break up and migration to Simla in April.

The Palumpore Fair.—The official report on the Palumpore Fair, now published, is not a very encouraging document. The Commissioner of the Jullundhur Division certainly tells us that, from a financial point of view and in the numbers who attended, it was more successful than any of its predecessors; but the trans-Himalayan traders, to attract whom the fair was originally planned, were very few in number, and transacted but little business. The weather was, however, unfavourable, so the sanguine may say it was that.—Pioneer.

A Church in Danger.—According to Indian Public Opinion, the Amritsar Church has been found to be quite unsafe, and the congregation therefore no longer meet in it. Service is now held in a bungalow in the civil station. As this bungalow is believed to have been originally constructed without any assistance from the P.W.D., the residents of Amritsur can meet together on Sunday in comparative safety. It is difficult to fix the attention on the service when it is necessary to keep one eye on the book and another on the roof, and the unsafe condition of the Church was causing considerable uneasiness.

Civil Service Pensions.—Last year a petition was forwarded from civilians in Bengal, praying the Indian Council for improved pension rules. No decision has yet been come to with regard to that petition. It is stated that the Duke of Argyll proposed to give an uniform pension of £1,000 a year, four per cent. being deducted, as at present, from all salaries, and the expense involved in the new rate of pension being met by reductions in furlough allowances. A despatch to this effect was actually drafted, but it was rejected by a majority of members at a recent meeting of the Indian Council, and consequently the whole question is in a state of complete uncertainty.—Times of India.

The Sanitarium at Puchmurry.—The Poonah Observer learns from Jowrah that Colonel R. Baigrie, late general "doing duty" officer at Mhow, and of the Bombay Staff Corps, has been appointed Commandant at Puchmurry, a new military sanitarium station in the Hoosungabad district, Central Provinces. Six barracks are to be built there at a cost to the State of Rs. 45,000 each, for the European troops of the Bengal army. An assistant engineer, an overseer, and two sub-overseers—all of them of the P. W. D., Central Provinces, have already arrived at Jowrah, and the works are expected to be proceeded with with as little delay as possible. It is said that Puchmurry will be a first-class sanitarium station. It is a very large place, and is considered to be very healthy, according to the opinion of a committee of medical officers. Private individuals will also be allowed to build bungalows on the hill, and, as it is a far nearer station than Simla we have no doubt it will, in course of time, come to be largely resorted to.

Military.—It is thought that Colonel T. F. Wilson, C.B., deputy adjutant-general, now in England, is likely to succeed to the Peshawur command.

Sir W. Muir on Education in the N.W. Provinces.—At the Durbar held by Sir W. Muir at Benares on the 27th January, his Honour, in addressing the assembled rajahs and chiefs, said :—"So far as the education of the agricultural classes is concerned, we have, I believe, the advantage of Bengal, by reason of our village circle system of schools. In my various tours I have had the opportunity of seeing many thousands of boys enjoying at these a good primary education; but in the higher branches our advantages have been less, and we are far behind. At the recent examinations we passed but four students for the B.A. test, while seventy-eight from Bengal were successful. The proportion for the Entrance Examination was somewhat better, being 107 against 889. And if every one aided according to their several ability, whether as members of the various educational committees, or as landowners and men of wealth and influence, in encouraging the establishment of schools, and promoting their efficiency, the advance would be still more rapid and satisfactory. Something may also be hoped from the movement for the establishment of a Central or University College at Allahabad, towards which his Highness the Maharajah of Benares and others have so handsomely contributed; and also from the projected Medical College at Allahabad, so munificently endowed by the Maharajah of Vizianagram. For the welfare of the country and the interests of your own children, I trust that you will all join vigorously in aiding and strengthening every such endeavour for extending the advantages far and wide of a sound and liberal education.

Imports.—Calcutta, Feb. 15.—Our market since last mail has been exceedingly quiet, and, with one or two exceptions, there is no feature of interest to notice. Prices have not undergone any material change during the week, and while importers have exhibited no pressure to sell, dealers on their part have no requirements for goods, having still considerable quantities left over from late purchases. From the tenor of late telegrams from Europe it is generally considered that a permanent peace is about to be established, and a feeling of confidence is thereby engendered. Grey Shirtings: 39-inch goods have been in very small request since our last at easier prices. The wide widths are neglected, and prices are nominal. Grey Jaconets: For low makes a good demand; demand continues at last mail's quotations, other qualities being quiet. Mulls continue in fair request at former rates. Madapollams and T-Cloths are very quiet, particularly the latter. Grey Twist: The demand for all counts has quietened since our last, and the market closes inactive at lower rates. For Coloured Twist demand has slightly improved during the past few days.

Exports.—Calcutta, Feb. 15.—Saltpetre: During the week about 300 tons of Calcutta refined Saltpetre have changed hands for shipments at Rs. 7-5 to 7-8 per factory maund. The stock is about 6,000 bags only in the market. Rice: There is an active demand in the market in Table kinds for shipments, and a fair amount of transactions have been done at ½ to 1 anna higher than our last quotations. In Balliam and Moonghy kinds a moderate business has been done. Linseed: Some sales have been made in the market for shipments both to Great Britain and America at Rs. 4-7 to 4-11 per maund. The stock is limited in the market. Rapeseed: New crop has arrived in the market, and transactions done for shipments are very trifling, but for local consumption large quantities are delivering daily. Poppyseed: Since the date of our last a moderate business has transpired for shipments in new crop at Rs. 3-13 to 4. Teelseed: Nothing has been done for shipments. Jute: Business done in this article since the date of our last is not much for shipments, at prices 2 to 3 annas lower than we last quoted. Raw Silk: During the week about 40 maunds of Radanagore Silk have changed hands at Rs. 3 to 13-4 per factory seer. Silk Piece Goods: Nothing doing; stock, 4,000 pieces.

Madras.

Lieut.-Colonel R. H. Sankey, R.E., Chief Engineer of the Mysore Commission, who has recently returned from two years' furlough to Europe, is about to proceed to Melbourne to post himself up in hydraulics. We presume the gallant Colonel will draw full pay during the time he is employed on this arduous duty.

Cotton and Indigo in Madras.—According to the Madras Standard, in November last the acreage of land under cotton cultivation in all the districts of the Presidency was 1,074,563, assessed at Rs. 12,60,164; of indigo 242,198 acres were under cultivation, yielding a revenue of Rs. 480,086. The cultivation of indigo has greatly increased in the last few months, especially in the southern and central districts of the Presidency.

The New Species of Cinchona.—Of the one hundred plants of Cinchona Piatyensis brought out to Madras by Dr. Simpson, thirty plants are now making vigorous young shoots, at Ootacamund forty-six plants are still alive, but have not yet begun to grow. Twenty-one cuttings of these plants have rooted, so that we now possess in all fifty-one healthy plants and forty-six plants which we still expect to grow. This completes the introduction to India of all the valuable varieties of quinine-yielding Cinchonas.—Madras Mail.

The Harbour Engineer.—The Madras Times learns that Mr. Robertson, C.E., the harbour engineer who has been appointed by the Secretary of State for India, will enter upon his work about the 10th Feb. He has been ordered to be at Beypore on the 7th, to proceed to Mangalore, where he will begin his work. From Mangalore Mr. Robertson will visit all the ports on the coast, returning to Madras via Negapatam.

The Enquiry on the 60th Rifles.—The Madras Standard says that a Court of Inquiry has been ordered to assemble at Bellary to investigate a subject which will be laid before it by the Brigadier-General Commanding Ceded Districts. President, Colonel R. Knox, 18th Hussars; Members, Colonel A. V. Falls, R.H.A., Lieut-Colonel J. T. Dalyell, 21st Foot. Colonel C. C. McCallum, Deputy Judge Advocate, will conduct the proceedings of the Court. The proceedings, when closed, will be sent to the Adjutant-General at Madras.

Arrival of an Italian Ambassador in Burmah.—An Italian frigate, Clotilde, of fourteen guns and 300 men, came up the river yesterday afternoon, and brought to anchor in the Pegu River, where she was shortly afterwards boarded by the Master Attendant. It is understood that the captain of the Clotilde comes as Ambassador, or Envoy Plenipotentiary, on a political mission to the King of Burmah, in connection with which rumour has it that the Italian Consul, Mr. Hernandez, has already proceeded to Mandalay by the last up-country steamer. The next day, the Chief Commissioner, accompanied by his Secretary, Mr. J. Talboys Wheeler, the Master Attendant, Captain Arnot, and Major Bluett, of H.M.'s 2-10th Regiment, paid an official visit to his Italian Majesty's corvette Clotilde, now lying in the river. General Fytche was received at the gangway by a guard of honour, and after proceeding through the vessel, the crew were drawn up and put through the small arms' exercise and other evolutions. On leaving the ship the usual salute befitting the rank of the Chief Commissioner was fired, and was replied to by the Government steamer Nemesis. The crew of the Clotilde are a fine, healthy, well-disciplined body of men, and everthing about the ship appeared in the most perfect order.—Rangoon Gazette, Feb. 3.

The King of Burmah as a Merchant.—The Rangoon Gazette learns from letters by the steamer from Mandalay that the King has fully made up his mind to transact in future all his foreign trade with British merchants, and that Mr. Edmund Jones has been appointed one of his mercantile agents in Rangoon. Already large consignments of produce and precious stones have been sent down, and several orders of an important character have been entrusted to Mr. Jones for execution; among them, a sea-going steamer to run direct between this and London with passengers and cargo. This, indeed, will be a great boon to the community, and we hope the undertaking may meet with every success. His Majesty, so our correspondent writes, has conferred upon Mr. Jones the highest honour he possibly could on any private individual. While everyone is complaining of the dulness of the times, it is gratifying to find here and there a bright exception. There are, we feel, but few in our community who will not congratulate Mr. Jones on his good luck, although after all this is scarcely a proper term to apply to the success of a merchant who came to Burmah among the first pioneers of British enterprise, and is now reaping the fruits of seventeen years' hard work.

The late Virabhadra M. Pandit.—We have to deplore the untimely loss of this promising native Judge, who died almost in harness at his post at Sircy, in Canara. Mr. Virabhadra was a young man of excellent parts. He was a pupil of the Sirdar's School at Belgaum, and an under graduate of our University. From the humble post of an Assistant Master he was selected in 1863 for the important office of Senior Canarese Translator and Interpreter of our High Court. Here his industry and abilities were throughout conspicuous. In 1868 he passed the Subordinate Judge's test, and was appointed Munsif of Chikodi. His abilities and character could not fail to attract the notice of the local, as well as the central authorities; and on the reorganisation after the new Bombay Courts Act, he was at once raised to a first-class subordinate Judgeship over the heads of a number of superannuated Canarese men. This promotion was natural and well deserved. On his transfer to Canara, the young Judge found that the climate of Sircy would not agree with him. He, however, stayed on, and at last obtained sick leave for three months. As it happens, however, generally, the order reached with the superscription of—too late. Mr. Virabhadra left Sircy, but after proceeding to some distance it was found necessary to take him back; and back he went to Sircy, to return to his native village no more. He expired on the 30th of the last month, leaving a wide circle of friends and relatives to mourn over his premature decease.—Native Opinion, Feb. 12.

STATION TALK.

Kherwarrah, Feb.—The little-known station of Kherwarrah was the scene of an imposing ceremony on the evening of the 6th February. Advantage had been taken by Colonel Mackenzie, Commandant of the Meywar Bheel Corps, of the presence on a visit of Colonel Nixon, Political Agent, Beywar, and Mrs. Nixon, to ask the latter to present the colours recently received from Government to the regiment. Mrs. Nixon having kindly consented to do so, the regiment paraded at five P.M. Mrs. Nixon and Mrs. Mackenzie arrived on the parade-ground in a carriage and four, attended by Colonel Nixon on horseback, who was received with a salute from the regiment, which was drawn up in review order. The old colours were then trooped, and finally marched down the line to the rear, followed by the band playing "Auld Lang Syne," after which three sides of a square having been formed, Mrs. Nixon presented the new colours to two of the native officers, who received them on bended knee. She then addressed the following speech to Colonel Mackenzie:—"Colonel Mackenzie,—It gives me great pleasure to have the honour of presenting the new colours to the regiment under your command, the more so as it is the first time that it has fallen to the lot of an English woman to present these emblems of confidence granted by our Gracious Sovereign Queen Victoria to the Meywar Bheel Corps, and I feel assured that you and your officers and men will guard them with soldiery devotion. I am convinced of this, as in the time of England's greatest need the gallant Bheel corps remained faithful to the trust reposed in them, and kept their old colours untarnished. I present the colours in the confident hope that whenever they are borne, victory will follow a just cause." To which Colonel Mackenzie replied:—"Mrs. Nixon,—I have to offer you my most cordial thanks and those of every member of the regiment under my command, for the kindness with which you acceded to my request, that you should present the corps with its new colours, a wish that was prompted, not only by the official position held by Colonel Nixon as her Majesty's representative in the State of Meywar, but also by the knowledge of the kindly feeling he has always evinced towards the corps, which has been engendered by his lengthened acquaintance with it, and I venture to add, his appreciation of its merits. Speaking on behalf of my regiment, I would express our grateful acknowledgment of the very gratifying terms in which you have referred to the past career of the Meywar Bheel Corps, and I would especially thank you for the happy allusion to the fidelity of the Bheels, and their staunch adherence to their colours, during the trials and temptations to which they were subjected at the time to which you refer, and when they realised the hope expressed by their first commandment on the occasion of the presentation of their first colours in 1843. Colonel Hunter's words were—'Let us indulge in the hope that on the day of trial the Bheel will be found true to his salt, ready and willing to rally round and protect these standards, undaunted by danger and difficulty, and resolved if he must relinquish them to do so only with his life.' Colonel Hunter relied on the natural attributes of the Bheels, their self-sacrificing devotion to their chiefs, and trust in one another, which characteristics having been judiciously guided into a new channel, viz., that of pride in their corps, and a trusting fidelity towards their officers, led to the result on which you have kindly passed so gratifying an eulogium, and I trust, indeed I have no doubt, that the colours you are now making over to their charge will ever be jealously guarded by them, and should the occasion arise, that they will be followed to victory. I again beg to thank you for the honour you have done us." Line was then re-formed, the ranks opened, and the new colours saluted, after which the regiment broke into column and marched passed in quick time, the old colours following behind the rear company.

Rajcote, Feb. 13.—On Wednesday afternoon last an interesting ceremony took place here, springing from the Duke of Edinburgh's visit to Bombay. His Highness the Nawab of Joonaghur, the first amongst the Kattywar chiefs to set apart a princely sum (a lac of rupees) for public works in this province, with which to commemorate the Royal visit, did, in consultation with the Political Agent, allot Rs. 60,000 of the above amount for the building of a new and commodious High School at this station, Wednesday last being fixed upon as the auspicious day for the ceremony of laying its foundation. The building will face the Rajkoomar College, the site being on the city side of the Gondul-road, where tents were pitched on the afternoon in question for the accommodation of intending visitors. Colonel Anderson, with Major-General Sir Edward Russell, K.C.S.I., Commanding N.D. (who was on a tour of inspection here at the time), attended by Captain Nutt, acting assistant political agent, and Major Lock, A.A.G., N.D., arrived on the ground at five P.M., where had already assembled the Principal and Vice-Principal of the Rajkoomar College; Major Smith, Captain Eden, Captain Sorell, R.A., Captain Goodfellow, in acting charge of the States of Gondul and Rajcote, Mr. Krishnajee Luximon, acting personal assistant to the agent, together with the heads of the native departments; besides a great many general spectators. Immediately after the political agent's arrival, the assembly was joined by the present inmates of the college, viz., the young Thakoors of Bhownuggur, Rajcote, Limree and his brother, Morvee and his brother, the son of the Thakoor Sahib, of Palitana, and the Thakoor himself (the latter having come up to place his son in college), Mr. Booth, local funds engineer, &c. Mr. Booth having laid a plan and drawing of the intended building upon the table, the proceedings commenced by the Vakeel of his Highness the Nawab reading an address and a letter in the vernacular from H. H., who was unavoidably debarred the pleasure of being present in person from a painful domestic bereavment, which for the present confines him to his capital of Joonaghur. Colonel Anderson, having previously deposited a metal box containing a record of the event, signed by himself, the Major-General, and the principal officers present, together with several coins and papers of the day, including the Times of India, the foundation stone was carefully lowered, then tested and tried by the Colonel, who thereupon declared the stone to be well and truly laid. This being done, Mr. Juggunath, Deputy Superintendent, Rajcote, read an address laudatory of the undertaking, and expressing the approval and thanks of all classes of the community at the liberality of his Highness the Nawab in thus providing such handsome accommodation for the scholars attending the High School of Kattywar. The interesting proceedings then terminated with the usual distribution of pan-sooparee. I am not aware that his Highness the Nawab aspires to the honour of knighthood, nor have I ever heard this so much as hinted at in Kattywar; but I am aware others in the province received this distinction, who were no more deserving recipients than the Nawab would be. He has already given a five per cent. guarantee for a railway from Verawul to Joonaghur, and agreed to defray the expenses of a working survey of the same. He has recently engaged the services of a talented young civil engineer (son of Professor Blaikey, of Edinburgh), for the purpose of carrying out extensive improvements at the bunder of Verawul, on which he has determined to spend a large sum of money—though he has already within the last few years spent over three lacs of rupees on it. He has given Rs. 60,000 for a public school, and Rs. 40,000 for public rest-houses. He has given a large sum for founding scholarships for the High School here, as well as for the Bombay University, besides constructing several new roads through his territory. —Times of India Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

Death of Mr. Capon.—We regret to learn of the death, at Kotree, a few days ago, of Mr. Capon, commander of one of the Punjab flotilla steamers.—Sindian, Feb. 11.

Jail Department.—Dr. Wiehe, it is again stated, and we believe with truth, vacates his post as Inspector-General of Prisons, and Dr. Cruickshank succeeds him. Dr. Cooke will in that case replace Dr. Cruickshank as Superintendent of Mahableshwar. Another item for which we were quite prepared is that Dr. Beatty acts for Dr. Lord during the latter's furlough to England.—Times of India.

The Murrees.—Ghuzzain Khan, the Sirdar of the Murrees, has despatched some sowars to Jacobabad, for the purpose of receiving the gratuity allowed to the Murrees by the British Government. In the event of the allowance being stopped, of which apprehensions are entertained by the Sirdar, in consequence of the lawless acts of the Murrees, the Murrees will, it is said, carry on their freebooting exploits on an extended scale.

Messrs. Smith and Co.'s Steam Service.—The City of Oxford, the first of George Smith and Co.'s new "City" line, has made a most lucrative voyage through the Canal, carrying a full cargo, chiefly indigo, at £4 10s. to £5 a ton. Another of the "Cities," the City of Brussels, a fine steamer of the same line, is now in Bombay harbour, on the berth for London. We trust she will gladden the hearts of her owners as much as the City of Oxford has done.

Arrival of H.M.S. "Wolverine."—H.M.S. Wolverine, 17, steam-corvette, 1,703 tons, 400-horse power, Capt. H.R. Wratislaw, arrived in Bombay harbour on Feb. 16 from Aden, having come out to join the East Indian squadron from England, via the Suez Canal. She was under canvas for the greater portion of the voyage. She will probably remain in Bombay until the arrival of Admiral Cockburn, who is now on his way to Bombay from Madras in the flag-ship, H.M.S. Forte.

Military.—We learn that Captain Beattie, of the 66th Foot, who was appointed to act as Assistant Quarter-Master General at Kurrachee on the transfer of Major Stanley Edwardes to Poona, has been relieved of that office at his own request. Major Davis, of the 2nd Belooch Regiment, will perform the duties of Assistant Quarter-Master General until an experienced officer is appointed.—It is stated that Colonels Hill and Mundy have sent in their applications for furlough, and that Colonel Hill will leave India immediately. Probably neither officer will return, as they will become entitled to their off-reckonings before the expiry of their leave. Colonel Hamilton is spoken of as likely to succeed Colonel Mundy, and it is rumoured that Colonel James will officiate for Colonel Hill.—Times of India.

Another Convert to Islam.—The Sindian says: — "Another European pervert to Mahomedanism has arrived in Kurrachee, in company with some Pathans, en route to Candahar; the man's name was Robert Green; he is a native of Birmingham, where he has a mother and sister living. He was lately a fitter in the G.I.P. Railway line, and draws a pension from Government of thirty shillings per mensem. He was made a Mussulman in Bombay about fifteen days ago. Robert Green is now Deen Mahomed; he is the son, it is said, of a Sergeant John Green, of the 33rd Regiment, who died in battle during the mutinies."

English Recklessness.—Natives may not carry arms without a license, we believe. It would be well if Europeans were subjected to some restriction in this matter. Every month or two we have some sad case before our Courts in which a European is accused of having taken the life of a native. Lately, a man with a gun, in the Poona districts, took a fancy to some sugar-cane he saw growing in a field, and plucked as many stalks as he could conveniently carry; but the owner or cultivator, a native, saw the act and ran up to him, when an altercation ensued, and the gun, either accidentally or otherwise, was discharged, causing the death of the poor man who was not willing to be plundered of his sugar-cane. The gentleman who was engaged in this dastardly work has been tried and acquitted, the jury not finding evidence that he had intentionally killed the man; but cases like this are altogether too frequent.—Bombay Guardian, Feb. 11.

Mr. Forde.—After many wanderings, Mr. Forde, whom our readers will remember as the telegraphic engineer who attended to the interests of the British-Indian Submarine Telegraph Company, is again in Bombay. Mr. Forde is on his way to England, having just returned from seeing the cable laid between Madras, Singapore and Batavia. Mr. Latimer Clarke will see to the laying of the China cable, and proceed home across the Pacific. It is curious to know that in the submersion of the cable to Singapore greater depths were found than in the Atlantic; and what with depth and weight of cable the strain was something terrific. Had the cable snapped then, the recovery of it would have been a very difficult matter; but, fortunately, no snap occurred, though little could be done to prevent it. In all, over 1,400 miles of cable were paid out, and when the anchor dropped at Batavia, only sixteen miles remained in the tank. But all is well that ends well, and the expedition was very deservedly feted.—Times of India.

Death of Colonel Sinclair.—The Times of India says:— "Many of our readers, with ourselves, will have noticed with regret the death of Lieutenant-Colonel Sinclair, 26th N.I., which occurred at Jeypore on the 3rd instant. Colonel Sinclair was very favourably known from his services in various capacities. These services are but imperfectly summarised in the following paragraph from the official record:—'Served with the Persian Expeditionary Force during the forced march on Booraxjoon, the occupation of the enemy's entrenched camp, night attack and battle of Khooshab, bombardment and capture of the forts of Mohumra, and the pursuit of the Persian army (medal and clasp); served in the Deccan against the rebel Bheels in 1857, at the engagements of Shumshapore and Mohadeoghur; served in Khandeish and Nimar against the attempted invasion of the Deccan by the rebel army under Tantia Topee in 1858-59; served in Rewa Kanta in operations against the Naikras in 1859.'"

Arrival of the S.S. "Ganges," via Suez Canal.—The steamship Ganges, 1,542 tons, Commander W. S. Manson, arrived in harbour on the night of the 13th February, with a general cargo (of about 1,400 tons), from Liverpool, which port she left on the 3rd of January last, arriving at Falmouth on the 6th. On the 11th she experienced a heavy north-east gale, during which four of her boats were broken, and one of the crew died; besides sustaining the partial loss of her bulwark on the port side. She passed Gibraltar on the 15th, Malta on the 19th, Port Said on the 26th, and Suez on the 28th. At Port Said a stoppage of forty hours was made for the purpose of burying the dead seaman. Altogether she has been thirty-four days out from Falmouth to Bombay, including the detention at Port Said. She spoke, in the Red Sea, the steamship Russia, eastward bound, and between Aden and Suez passed several steamers and ships, bound eastward and westward. The Ganges is a fine vessel, with about a dozen cabin berths for passengers. She belongs to Messrs. Donkerley and Co., of Hull; and is consigned to Messrs. Greaves, Cotton, and Co., of Bombay. She will, we hear, again sail for Liverpool, with about nine thousand bales of cotton, on the 10th proximo.—Times of India.

London to Bombay by the Italian Line.—To the Editor of the Pioneer.—"Sir,—'In 27 days, fare 50 guineas, exclusive of wines,' such was the advertisement that met my eye in the Times in December last, as I was contemplating return to duty. It seemed to offer the opportunity of a cheap and quick voyage to India, and I secured a berth in the S.S. India, belonging to Messrs. Rubattino and Co., of Genoa. We were about thirty passengers when we left Blackwall at noon on the 7th January. On the 9th we tumbled our pilot into a boat at Plymouth, not heeding his advice, that as the weather looked dirty ahead we had better anchor till the storm blew over. Our Genoese captain had too much of the sailor blood in his veins to care for a puff of wind, and we soon left Old England behind. Across the Bay of Biscay the wind was high and the sea heavy, but the good ship bore herself bravely, and we reached Cape St. Vincent with loss of only a spar. On the seventh day, on a bright warm sunny morning, we steamed along past Gibraltar almost within speaking distance. The Mediterranean was calm and the weather magnificent, and after four days' delightful sail we steamed into the famed Bay of Naples. Here we remained two days, where we had a run to Pompeii and a sight of Vesuvius. Twelve hours' steam brought us to Stromboli, which seemed as active as ever in its glow and showers of red sparks. Three hours more, and we passed the Messina Straits, and on the morning of the 26th we reached Port Said. After three hours' delay we entered the Canal and had a delightful sail to Suez, the air pure and exhilarating and the lakes beautiful—altogether the Canal is the best part of the voyage to India. The actual transit occupied thirteen and a-half hours, but as night overtook us we had to 'lagao' during the darkness, and on the 27th we entered Suez harbour, where we stayed four hours. Down the Red Sea we had strong head-winds, which kept us quite cool, but it took us six and a-half days to Aden and seven more to Bombay, which we reached early on the morning of the 10th inst., thirty-two days from the London Docks, or thirty from Plymouth. The ship is a good one, and steams her ten knots easily; her cabins are large, and with the saloon well ventilated. Both are amidships. Regarding the interior economy of the ship I may say that there was a wish on the part of the captain and all under him to make us comfortable. I cannot say that they wholly succeeded; all were not satisfied. The ways of a 'furriner' are not as our ways; our standard of cleanliness is different from that of a native of Naples or Genoa; hence the arrangements on the main deck were faulty. The supply of water in the latrines was not equal to the demand; there is room for improvement here. Touching the table, how could it be expected that a Britisher could dine a la Italienne? The supposition is maddening. Where are the huge joints of tough under or overdone meat so dear to the soul of an Englishman? We were not even allowed the privilege of carving our own meat. Need I say more? To those who like Continental cookery and ways of serving I think the Italian steamers will give satisfaction. One serious cause of complaint we had was the high price of the liquor on board—beer, 2s. 6d. a bottle; vin ordinaire, f.3. This should be remedied; but as wine is included in their £50 to Genoa, future passengers will escape these high charges. A cleaner ship and a supply of better beef will ensure to the Italians a large share of passengers to and from India. I wish them all success.—A PASSENGER."

THE ALBERT ASSURANCE COMPANY.

The following letter from Messrs. Bell and Lattey, attorneys to the Calcutta policyholders of the Albert Company, will explain itself:—

142, Gresham-house, Old Broad-street, London,
4th March, 1871.

(To David Forrest, Esq., Honorary Secretary of the Albert Reconstruction Committee.)

Dear Sir,—In consequence of the result of the proceedings before the Lord Justice, on the hearing of the Petition of Reconstruction, we have most carefully considered our present position as members of the Reconstruction Committee. The Lord Justice James's decision on the question of jurisdiction is one which has taken neither of us by surprise, as our often-expressed opinion at meetings of the committee on this subject testifies; and you may remember that when the case first came on, in July last, we particularly pressed upon the committee the necessity of having the preliminary question of jurisdiction settled by the Court before incurring further delay and expense. This suggestion, as well as many others, which we felt it our duty to make, and which we believe the members of the committee will now admit were sound and worthy of consideration, were overruled, and the case of the reconstruction of the Agra and Masterman's Bank, which we always thought was a very different case from the present, was continually quoted as a precedent which the Court was sure to follow when dealing with this scheme; and our doubting as to the applicability of that case was regarded as absurd. Notwithstanding that we have for many months past felt that there was great doubt as to the Court having power to sanction the scheme, and also that the scheme would, after the sad delay that has occurred since the failure of the "Albert," be comparatively unsatisfactory, we, relying on the different opinions expressed by our chairman, and Dr. Farr, and our solicitor, continued loyally to give our support up to the last.

The time has now, however, come when, in our opinion, it is impossible for policyholders and shareholders to continue in a joint committee, because the object (which immediately upon the failure of the Albert was much to be desired) of reconstruction has wholly failed by reason of the decision of Lord Justice James, as well as owing to the lapse of time, this latter being, in our opinion, as fatal to the success of our scheme as the former one.

The real question now is—What is the most rapid and satisfactory mode of forcing the shareholders to meet their liabilities, by making them pay their debts, and thus obtaining even a small pittance for the unfortunate policyholders and representatives of deceased policyholders.

Any further delay in the liquidation will, in our opinion, result in increased misery and increased waste of assets. And we cannot disguise from ourselves that the effect of our attempted reconstruction has been considerably to delay the progress of the liquidation, as we believe, to the detriment of policyholders. Policyholders have also, to our knowledge, been holding back from effecting reassurances in the belief that reconstruction could be effected. The committee is fully aware of our great objection to asking policyholders to pay their premiums to the Agra Bank in hopes of a reconstruction, as we feared that having to make these payments might deprive them of the means of effecting another insurance; and we have openly announced at meetings of the committee that we have invariably advised persons applying to us at once to reinsure, and not to wait for reconstruction.

A very erroneous view appears to have been taken of the effect of what fell from the Lord Justice as to an application to Parliament; and it must be remembered that his Lordship had no data before him upon which he could form an opinion as to the points upon which it would be advisable to have the aid of Parliament; but his expression of his fear that nothing but an Act of Parliament could put a stop to the expenses of liquidation seemed to be founded on an impression that contested questions, such as arose in the case of the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway, required solution. This opinion we, who have a full knowledge of the facts, do not believe that his Lordship would with the same knowledge have been prepared to express; and we do not think it is fair to the Lord Justice to found upon a carefully-guarded dictum an argument that his Lordship is desirous that an application should be made for a Bill in Parliament.

The effect of decisions lately given by the Court of Chancery—and which decisions may be taken as assented to by the whole profession, as settling the law—is to clear away a mass of doubt and difficulty which previously prevented the liquidators from knowing how and against whom to class the different creditors, or how to assess the damages. With the exception of one or two points, which can be decided in a very few days, there are comparatively no difficulties now as to the position of the creditors towards the debtors; and the only serious questions which exist are questions rather affecting the shareholders, directors, and other persons deriving benefit from the amalgamations of the different companies as to the mass of money removed from its legitimate purposes to the alleged remuneration of those affecting the amalgamations, and as to the validity of some of them; any funds recovered by any proceedings as to these points would be divided amongst the creditors of the particular company, and any questions so arising would be easily determined by bills in Chancery filed by the liquidators, with the approval of the Court.

One question only (except as above) appears to us to exist as between the creditors and the companies, and that is, whether the shareholders' liability is or is not limited. This is a point that the Court of Chancery can at once decide, and it has already in previous failures of insurance companies decided that the liability for expenses of liquidation is unlimited; and if it is upon these points that the aid of Parliament is to be sought, it appears to us extremely improbable that Parliament will interfere by passing an Act which would alter the legal liabilities of the parties as declared to exist by a Court of Equity; but, supposing our opinion to be wrong in this respect, it is clear that any such interference by Parliament could in no way benefit policyholders, but might benefit shareholders, and them only, by reducing their liability—a result we feel called on most strongly to oppose.

Feeling deeply as we do for many of these shareholders, anything like an expression of sympathy for the general body would be wholly misplaced; the shareholders have not attempted, since the catastrophe took place, to come forward in a bold and generous spirit to meet their liabilities, notwithstanding, that in the case of the amalgamated companies, the shareholders received large sums out of what was in truth policyholders' money; and we beg to recall to your mind the pressure that it was necessary to put upon the shareholders to extract from them suffioient even to pay the current expenses of the committee, the only persons who really appeared to have a sense of their duty being those gentlemen who attended as shareholder committee men.

If steps are taken to apply to Parliament for an arbitration, even supposing that such an application were successful, the expense of the proceedings in Parliament, and in the arbitration, would be quite, if not more ruinous, so far as policyholders are concerned, as the expenses of liquidation, which must fall on shareholders; and the only parties who, in our opinion, would be benefited by a change from liquidation to arbitration, would be the professional gentlemen whose aid would be required for initiating and managing the fresh proceedings, probably to the detriment of those whose duty it is at present to conduct the various liquidations under the Court of Chancery.

We therefore beg to resign all further connection with the "Reconstruction Committee," and, in doing so, we trust that you will accept our sincere thanks for the great labour and attention which you have devoted, and the great courtesy you have always shown during your difficult office of honorary secretary.—We are, Sir, yours faithfully,

John D. Bell,
Robt. Thos. Lattey.

Miscellaneous.

Oxford University.—The election at New College to the two vacant Open Classical Scholarships, of the value of £100, and tenable for five years, was yesterday morning announced in favour of the following gentlemen, who were successful out of twenty-three candidates: Mr. W. Goodchild, Marlborough College, and Mr. G. Rundell, Clifton College.

Export of Bullion.—According to a summary of the export of bullion to the East, compiled by Mr. F. M. Page, the total shipments during 1870 were £4,507,388, showing a decrease as compared with those of 1869 of about four and a half millions sterling. To Alexandria there was an increase of about three-quarters of a million, but to Bombay a decrease of four millions, to Madras and Calcutta a decrease of about one million, and to China and the Straits of Malacca a decrease of about a quarter of a million.

The Suez Canal.—The following is an extract from a letter, dated Alexandria, March 3, 1871:—"The Neera (s.), from Bombay, reached Suez at five P.M. on Feb. 28, after a stormy passage up the Red Sea. The canal is in better working order now; ships drawing twenty-two and twenty-three feet have easily passed. The last two days, however, we hear it has been blocked up by one of the telegraph steamers with about 2,000 miles of cable on board; there is water where she struck, but the strong northerly currents have jammed her across the canal. A few days ago the Arizona, a 3,000-ton side-wheel steamer of the San Francisco and Japan Company, went through very successfully.

Dutch Indian Railway.—Proposals have been issued by Messrs. Samuel, Montagu, and Co., on behalf of the Dutch Indian Railway Company, for subscriptions in Five per Cent. Bonds, amounting to £189,000. The interest and repayment of capital at par are guaranteed by the Dutch Home Government. The price of issue is £90. 10s. per cent., and, reckoning the accrued interest and the value of the reimbursement at par, the investment is calculated to yield nearly 6 per cent. The money is for the completion of a line of railway in Java, and, for the better security of the bondholders, the company have assigned their claim on the Government, which is sufficient for the interest and repayment of capital, to certain bankers named, who are appointed trustees for the holders.

Society of Arts.—Adjourned Debate on the Commerce of India.—A conference was held on Friday, March 3rd, on the subject of "The Commerce of India," being an adjourned discussion on a paper read before the Society on Feb. 15 by D. Naoroji, Esq. (see Allen's Indian Mail, Feb. 21). Sir Bartle Frere, K.C.B., G.C.S.I., presided. The chairman, partly supporting the views of the paper, advocated a reform in the land laws of India in an able speech. Messrs. Tayler, Kazi Shahabudin, Maitland, and General Sir Arthur Cotton, spoke in succession. The latter agreed with Mr. Tayler, who had maintained that there was no free representative system of Government; no provision for hearing the voices of the masses of the people. The discussion was brought to an end by an elaborate reply from Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji.

The Martini-Henry Rifle.—It is with the greatest gratification (says the Standard) that we are able to state that the committee's final report will be presented to Parliament in the course of at most a few days. With the reports and the evidence given in the appendices to the main document we shall be able to deal as soon as the paper has become public property in the customary manner. We may, however, confidently notify the general conclusions arrived at, and sanctioned by the Secretary for War. In the consideration of the arm itself, the examples put into the hands of troops have been of two natures, one with a very long breechlock suitable to the extraordinary five-inch Boxer cartridge, one with a short breech action and a suitable short cartridge, officially termed the Boxer-Henry, but, in reality, differing little from the bottle-shaped soldered cartridge produced long previously by Mr. Daw. Both the Martini breech actions are identical except in respect to their lengths. The shorter one has naturally and properly been preferred. Twenty-two of these short actioned arms were delivered for trial to certain regiment and ships in October last, and the reports received entirely confirmed the views of the committee as to their preferability, these weapons being now proved, in accuracy and general serviceability, equal in every way to those with the long-action, more than two hundred of which kind had been previously severely tried by regiments and on ship-board, and variously in England, Ireland, the Mediterranean, and Canada—the Snider rifles in the Service being taken as the tests for comparison. In nearly every instance the superiority of accuracy of the Martini-Henry arms, and the simplicity and facility of manipulation of the breech-action, have given complete satisfaction. In some cases, especially at the outset, there were misfires, caused by the weakness of the spiral springs then issued, but the stronger springs which have subsequently been used have practically remedied this deficiency; and whether flat springs be still maintained by some authorities to be more mechanically perfect than spiral springs, and whether any one believes in the correctness of Professor Pole's mathematical deductions, or undervalues or dissents from them, the reports from the commanders of troops and sailors are such as to justify the opinion the committee have expressed, that the spiral spring is suited to the purpose it is applied to in the Martini breech action. We understand they have gone even further, and do not hesitate to declare it acts better than the flat spring of the ordinary lock for a military arm. The previous report of the committee was made in July last year; the present final one was agreed to in the month just passed. The practical trials themselves have extended over a period of eighteen months, and during that interval the committee have taken evidence as to the mechanical construction of the Martini breech-action from Col. Dixon, the Superintendent of the Royal Small Arms Factories; Mr. Davidson, of the Royal Laboratory Department at Woolwich Arsenal; Mr. Perry, of the Small Arms Factories; Mr. Nasmyth, C.E., Dr. Pole, Mr. E. Woods, C.E.; Mr. Martini, the inventor, was also examined. Mr. Bramwell, C.E., and Captain Beaumont, R.E., M.P., were invited, but declined. The committee have further made from time to time experiments to satisfy the suggestions and criticisms contained in the reports rendered to them, and after carefully surveying the results brought under their notice, have come unanimously to the decision of recommending the short-actioned Martini-Henry rifle for adoption into both the military and naval services. They also, with the like concord, recommend the bottle-shaped ammunition; and for military service the Elcho bayonet."

Imperial Parliament.

House of Commons, Thursday, March 9.—Officers' Commissions.—Colonel C. Lindsay asked the Secretary of State for War in what way he had taken powers, in the Army Regulation Bill, with reference to the repayment of the customary price of an officer's commission who was either dangerously ill or who had died.—Mr. Cardwell said he had not taken power in the Army Regulation Bill to give any sum of money out of the public funds to which officers would not have been entitled if this Bill did not become law. They did not desire to impose a limit upon the number of commissions to be sold which would inflict upon officers inconvenience and loss, and the limit fixed in the Bill was a matter which would be open to reconsideration.

The Army Regulation Bill.—The adjourned debate on the second reading of this Bill was resumed by Lord Elcho, who delivered a speech of two hours' length in opposition to the motion. Declining to discuss the question in the narrow groove of Colonel Loyd Lindsay's resolution, which touched only on the secondary question of purchase, he went into an exhaustive analysis of the Bill to show that it was utterly inadequate to the necessities of the times, trying it by three standards—what should be the gauge of our armaments, what is their actual condition, and what are our wants. The gauge of our armies was our foreign policy, and though the mass of the people detested war as much as the Peace Society, yet they were alive to the fact that the honour and safety of the country might at some time compel us to go to war. For this purpose, he maintained, it was not enough to have a certain number of men to defend these shores; we must have a force capable of rapid expansion, which must be sent to reinforce our garrisons in India and the colonies. On the purchase question Lord Elcho observed, though not a defender of it in the abstract, that it had worked well. It secured a constant flow of young, physically efficient officers, it protected the army from favouritism, and perpetuated a regimental esprit; and he went on to maintain that every object professedly aimed at by the abolitionists could be equally obtained under the purchase system. He dwelt some time on the cost of abolition, including retirement, quoting some figures from a speech of Captain Vivian, who had calculated it at ten millions down and a million a year for ever, which he stigmatised as a wicked, wanton, and uncalled-for waste of public money. Continuing his criticisms on the Bill, he complained that the ballot clauses were mere waste paper, as they only came into operation on an emergency, which would mean when London was occupied by an enemy. It did nothing to secure a constant flow of men for the Line and Militia, and it gave the War-office no hold on the volunteers. In short, the Bill promoted neither efficiency nor economy; it was a political and not a national measure.—Captain VIVIAN, in reply, touched first at some length on the question of purchase, the abolition of which he contended had become absolutely necessary. The flow of promotion, he maintained, could be secured without it, and from the returns he showed that the regimental system did not depend on officers passing through all the grades from the lowest to the highest in the same regiments. Discussing Lord Elcho's estimate of our wants, he declared that they could not be supplied except by a continental conscription, and that the Bill would give us all we needed unless we departed from our old traditional policy. He gave details of our present home force and of the recent satisfactory progress of recruiting, maintaining that voluntary enlistment would find us all the men we needed. This led him to combat the suggestion of a ballot, which the official returns proved had worked unjustly and capriciously in the early part of the century, and vindicated the Government plan of forming an Army Reserve. This he compared in detail with the plan suggested by Lord Elcho in his book, which he showed by calculations would cost considerably more without producing an equal number of men. —Mr. J. S. HARDY treated the Bill as one substantially for the abolition of purchase, and expressed his regret that the Government had not taken advantage of the awakened interest of the public in the question to bring in a really strong measure instead of taking up Mr. Trevelyan's parrot cry. Purchase could not be defended theoretically, but he maintained that it had many practical advantages, and the change was totally unnecessary and disadvantageous to the army. He approved of the transfer of the militia to the War-office, and regretted that the ballot had not been adopted as a means of getting a hold on the volunteers.—Mr. RYLANDS expatiated for some time on the iniquity of over-regulation prices, and the folly of recognising them; and Colonel LEARMOUTH eulogised the regimental system, and warned the House against destroying it.—Major DICKSON held that the meagre scheme of the Government trifled with the great question of army organisation. The system of selection would be most unpopular in the army, and, in commenting on the general provisions, he recommended that the Militia should be virtually amalgamated with the Line, and that the short service system should not be carried too far.—Mr. H. STORKS made a successful maiden speech in defence of the Bill, and, touching first on the purchase system, he asked whether the transactions it involved—more complicated than any on the Stock Exchange—were such as would increase the efficiency of the army or were dealings in which officers ought to be engaged. The Government found the vested interests it had created blocking their way in every direction when they attempted to reorganise the army, and, moreover, it tended to prevent the increase of the class of professionally educated officers so necessary in modern warfare. The proposed scheme of abolition, he maintained, did justice to every claim. As to paying down the price at once, as had been recommended, he showed that it would stop promotion and would do great injustice to individuals, and he maintained that there would be no difficulty in carrying out the system of selection if commanding officers and generals commanding districts did their duty. Discussing the regimental system under its military and social aspects, he doubted whether it was a good thing for officers to go through their whole career in the same regiment, and denied that the change would interfere with the valuable parts of that system. As to its social aspects, Sir Henry observed that whatever might tend to discourage extravagance must conduce to the well-being of the army. He passed lightly over the other provisions of the Bill, explaining how it was proposed to decentralise army administration, and to make every general responsible for everything under him, and ended by a hearty eulogium of the services and the sterling qualities of the British army.—Lord G. HAMILTON, as an officer, objected to the scheme on the ground that it did not promote efficiency, and, as a member of Parliament, on the grounds of its extravagance. Among other arguments against abolition he urged that it would make necessary a larger scale of pay for officers, and that selection must lead to favouritism and abuse.—Mr. STAPLETON made some observations, in the course of which he was understood to favour a bonus system; and the debate was then adjourned until Monday, on the motion of Sir J. PAKINGTON.

EAST INDIA FINANCE.—Mr. GRANT DUFF moved that the Select Committee on East India Finance do consist of twenty-one members, namely, Mr. Ayrton, Mr. Cave, Mr. Crawford, Mr. Baring, Mr. Fawcett, Mr. Beckett Denison, Sir Charles Wingfield, Mr. Eastwick, Mr. Dickinson, Mr. Bourke, Mr. Candlish, Sir James Elphinstone, Mr. Lyttelton, Mr. Birley, Sir David Wedderburn, Mr. Beach, Sir Thomas Bazley, Mr. Hermon, Mr. M'Clure, Mr. Cross, and Mr. Grant Duff. Power to send for persons, papers, and records; seven to be the quorum.—Sir T. BAZLEY moved that Mr. J. B. Smith be also named a member of the committee. The motion was agreed to, and he name added.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, FRIDAY, March 10.—PRINCE KASSA'S ENVOYS.—Mr. POWELL called attention to the circumstances under which an envoy of Prince Kassa, of Abyssinia, bearing presents to the Queen, after being detained three months at Alexandria, had been advised to return to his own country.—Mr. G. DUFF explained that the envoy had not been encouraged to come to England, because the Secretary of State for India had no funds out of which to defray his expenses, and the Treasury was not disposed to appropriate any funds to that purpose. He regretted the delay which had taken place, and promised that a suitable letter of acknowledgment and return presents should be sent to the Prince. The discussion closed with a significant allusion by Lord J. MANNERS to the unanswered letter of King Theodore.

ARMY PAY AND PROMOTION.—Mr. RYLANDS asked the Secretary of State for War whether he would lay upon the table of the House the alterations in the Royal Warrant concerning pay and promotion, by means of which he purposed to prevent hereafter the practice of paying sums of money in respect of promotions, and of receiving in respect of retirements.—Captain VIVIAN said that the Secretary of State was not in a position to lay the papers referred to on the table, but would do so as soon as possible.

INDIAN HARBOURS.—Sir J. ELPHINSTONE called attention to the imperfect harbour accommodation in India, and asked for a copy of instructions given to Mr. Robertson, the eminent civil engineer, ordered to report on the subject. The hon. baronet, speaking from his own observation, as well as from information he had collected from the reports of Indian officials, pointed out in detail the localities where he thought harbours should be made, rivers deepened, lighthouses established, and obstructions to navigation removed. He referred to various casualties which had taken place in consequence of the difficulties which vessels had to encounter in sailing between Ceylon and India, and warned the Government that, sooner or later, they would be compelled to give attention to the matter. As to the financial aspect of the question, he could not see why the Government of India should not place itself in communication with the Government of this country, and why a loan should not be contracted to carry on such works as might be considered necessary.—Sir J. HAY said that as one who had served in these seas he felt interested in the subject before the House. He greatly regretted the abandonment of the Hydrographical Office of India, and thought that it would have been wise, looking at the enormous seaboard of our dominions in India, if such a retrenchment had not been made. He (Sir J. Hay) thought that attention ought to be called to the harbour of Bombay, as during the Abyssinian war it had been the cause of increasing the expense in sending stores to Abyssinia.—Mr. GOURLAY was not only in favour of such improvements as those proposed in the motion, but also of carrying on others, such as roads, in India.—Mr. GRANT DUFF was glad that the hon. and gallant gentleman had taken this opportunity of calling attention to the harbours of India. It was desirable that sailors who had experience of the defective lighting on the coast of India should come there and say so. With regard to harbours, he could hardly follow the hon. and gallant gentleman, as much of the information he had given was new to him; but he was assured that it was perfectly true that there were a great many points around the Indian coast where very fair harbours might be made. With regard to the question of lights, much that had been said was perfectly true, but he hoped that before long they would have lights along the coast fifty miles apart. As to Mr. Robertson, he was sent to India to make an examination of the minor harbours, and his directions were to take instructions from the Indian authorities on the spot. The matter then dropped.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MONDAY, March 13.—OFFICERS' LETTERS.—Mr. MONSELL, in reply to Sir H. BRUCE, said that the privilege under which the letters of officers when on duty at foreign stations were sent out at a lower rate of postage than the ordinary letters of the public was abolished on the 1st January, 1870, by authority of a Treasury warrant. The letters of officers were not liable to any additional charge for redirection in those cases where the officers had been removed from the stations to which such letters were addressed before the arrival of the mail-bags.

COMMISSIONS IN THE ARMY.—In reply to Lord GARLIES, Mr. CARDWELL stated that 500 candidates had already passed for commissions, and therefore it would be a considerable time before there was any new examination for direct commissions.

Cost of the Abyssinian War.—In reply to Mr. Hunt, the Chancellor of the Exchequer stated that he did not say in his speech on the National Debt on Tuesday last that the Abyssinian war had added nineteen millions to the National Debt. The Abyssinian war cost less than nine millions. In defraying that charge they borrowed two millions from the Bank of England, which were repaid out of the balance, and there were Exchequer Bonds for a million which had since been paid off. The fact was, that by great exertions in the collecting and raising of more revenue, the cost of the Abyssinian war was prevented from becoming a public debt; and for that he was bound to say the public were mainly indebted to the exertions of the right hon. gentleman opposite. (Hear, hear.)

Abolition of Purchase.—In reply to Lord Garlies, Mr. Cardwell stated there was no sum in the present estimates to provide for the cost of the abolition of purchase which would be entailed this year by the passing of the Army Regulation Bill. If the Bill passed, it would be necessary to provide such portion of the sum calculated by the actuaries as would be required for the still unexpired portion of the year. The sum which was estimated for the whole year was £1,080,058.

Indian Engineering College.—In reply to Mr. Fawcett, Mr. G. Duff stated that there would be no objection to lay the correspondence between the Indian Office and the Government of India on the subject of the Engineering College at Cooper's-hill before e Parliament.—Mr. Fawcett again asked whether the Governor-General had been communicated with before any steps were taken.—Mr. G. Duff: Certainly.

The Army Regulation Bill.—The adjourned debate on the second reading of this Bill was resumed by Sir J. Pakington, who dwelt at length upon the advantages of the purchase system, especially upon the security it afforded that entrance into the army or promotion should not be obtained by favour or patronage, and entirely declined to consent to the enormous sacrifice of public money which had been proposed by the Government, without better reason than any that had been assigned for it. He complained of the want of information as to the nature or cost of the scheme of retirement which would be rendered necessary by the abolition of purchase, and strongly condemned the introduction of the principle of selection into the army.—Mr. Trevelyan, with whom Mr. Osborne for a moment contended for the ear of the House, entered at great length, not only into the question of the abolition of purchase, but into the other provisions of the Government measure. He especially combated the proposal of Mr. Rylands to pay only the regulation prices and allow the over-regulation payments to be compensated for by a bonus system, and ridiculed the exaggerated statements which had been made as to the cost of abolishing purchase—a change which lay at the root of all army reform; and of the scheme of retirement which it would render necessary. He made some sarcastic comments upon Lord Elcho's habit of repeating private conversations, and "the miners in buckram" whose opinions he was delighted to quote on all occasions, and excited a laugh rather at than with himself by the assertion that the characteristic of a gentleman was that he did not know whether he was one or not.—During the "dinner hour" Colonel Brise and Mr. Eastwick spoke against the abolition of purchase, and Mr. Gourley in its favour.—When the House had partially refilled Mr. Auberon Herbert, approving of the abolition of the purchase system, urged some objections to the payment of over-regulation prices; while Lord Eustace Cecil utterly condemned the Ministerial proposal, and asserted that it was opposed by thirteen-fourteenths of the officers of the army.—Captain Beaumont confessed that, as an army reformer, he was "cruelly disappointed" by the scheme of the Government for the reorganisation of the army; and while expressing approval of the abolition of purchase, asked for further information as to its cost.—After Colonel Barttelot had delivered his sentiments, the debate was adjourned till Thursday; and a proposal by Mr. Gladstone that it should close on that night met with little or no encouragement.

Notice of Motion.—Major Arbuthnot gave notice that on Thursday he should ask the Secretary of State for War whether it was his intention to submit any scheme this session to meet the stagnation with respect to promotion in the non-purchase corps, and which already existed, consequent on the proposed general abolition of purchase.

TRANSMISSION OF INDIAN, &c., MAILS, VIA THE BRENNER PASS AND BRINDISI.

The several lines of mail communication through France being exposed, by the operations of the War, to sudden interruption, the Postmaster-General considers that it has become absolutely necessary to divert the course of the British Overland Indian Mails, and to send them, for the present, through Belgium and Germany, and over the Brenner Pass, to Brindisi.

It is the mails despatched on Friday evening will only reach Brindisi, under existing arrangements, a short time before the departure of the Packet, the Supplementary Mails hitherto despatched on Saturday morning will be discontinued.—By command of the Postmaster-General.—General Post-office, October 19, 1870.

Trade with Central Asia.—We have done much to facilitate Central Asian trade by putting a gentle pressure on our feudatory, the Maharajah of Cashmere; but much more important results might be obtained if we could persuade the Ameer of Affghanistan to adopt an enlightened Customs policy. The character of the Ameer and the friendly relations subsisting between him and the Government of India render it not improbable that he would prove amenable to a well-considered representation on the subject. There has been during the last few years a large increase in the trade between Bokhara and Russia, which is said to be in a great measure attributable to the expenses and risks of the routes through Affghanistan. Russia is making great exertions to push her own wares, to the extent, it would almost seem, of glutting the market, and owing to this fact and the difficulties just referred to the prices of Russian are considerably lower than those of Indian goods in the Bokhara market. Three kinds of tea used to be taken from India to Bokhara, viz., Lawka, Puri, and Siyah; the first of these was sold at from 80 to 100 tillahs per 256 lbs., and Puri tea at 40 to 50 tillahs for the same quantity; while indigo varied in price from four to eight tillahs per 32 lbs. But the Lawka tea from Russia sells at 60 to 70, and the Puri at 20 tillahs; while the exportation of teek dye into Bokhara by Russia has brought down the price of indigo one-half, and large quantities are lying in the market unsaleable. The Russian merchants have also placed large quantities of chintzes and unbleached longcloths on the market, and are underselling the holders of similar goods from India to such an extent that, though the people of Bokhara greatly prefer the Indian goods, they are obliged to buy the Russian. Muslin from India was, we are told, formerly sold at 20 tillahs a kori; but it has now fallen to 12 or 14, and the sales are inconsiderable. Shawls and woollen goods from Amritsur and Cashmere were bought to a small extent for khilats, but the profit is said to be very moderate in all the great Central Asian markets, and it is only the profit on the silks imported into India in return which sustains the trade. As a proof of the serious character of the expense and difficulty incurred by traders despatching via Afghanistan, it may be mentioned that a merchant, who purchased a stock of tea in Calcutta, and exported it to Samarkand, via Yarkund and Kashgar, lately found by experience that he could clear a larger profit than by the Cabul route.

Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S (Ex. Army Med. Staff)

CHLORODYNE

IS THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

CAUTION.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. P. Wood stated that Dr. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the Inventor of CHLORODYNE: that the story of the Defendant, Freeman, being the Inventor was deliberately untrue, which he regretted had been sworn to. Eminent Hospital Physicians of London stated that Dr. J. Collis Browne was the discoverer of Chlorodyne; that they prescribe it largely, and mean no other than Dr. Browne's.—See Times, July 13, 1864.

The Public, therefore, are cautioned against using any other than

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.

This INVALUABLE REMEDY produces quiet, refreshing sleep, relieves pain, calms the system, restores the deranged functions, and stimulates healthy action of the secretions of the body, without creating any of those unpleasant results attending the use of opium. Old and young may take it at all hours and times when requisite. Thousands of persons testify to its marvellous good effects and wonderful cures, while medical men extol its virtues most extensively, using it in great quantities in the following diseases:—

Diseases in which it is found eminently useful—Cholera, Dysentery, Diarrhœa, Colics, Coughs, Asthma, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Whooping Cough, Cramp, Hysteria, &c.

Extracts from Medical Opinions.

The Right Hon. Earl Russell communicated to the College of Physicians and J. T. Davenport that he had received information to the effect that the only remedy of any service in Cholera was Chlorodyne.—See Lancet, Dec. 31, 1864.

From A. Montgomery, Esq., late Inspector of Hospitals, Bombay.—"Chlorodyne is a most valuable remedy in Neuralgia, Asthma, and Dysentery. To it I fairly owe my restoration to health, after eighteen months' severe suffering, and when other remedies had failed."

Dr. Lowe, Medical Missionary in India, reports (Dec. 1865) that in nearly every case of Cholera in which Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne was administered the patient recovered.

Extract from Medical Times, Jan. 12, 1866.—"Chlorodyne is prescribed by scores of orthodox medical practitioners. Of course it would not thus be singularly popular did it not 'supply a want and fill a place.'"

Extract from the General Board of Health, London, as to its efficacy in Cholera.—"So strongly are we convinced of the immense value of this remedy, that we cannot too forcibly urge the necessity of adopting it in all cases."

Beware of spurious and dangerous compounds sold as CHLORODYNE, from which frequent fatal results have followed.

See leading article, Pharmaceutical Journal, Aug. 1, 1859, which states that Dr. J. Collis Browne was the Inventor of Chlorodyne; that it is always right to use his preparation when Chlorodyne is ordered.

CAUTION.—None genuine without the words "Dr. J. Collis Browne" on the Government stamp. Overwhelming medical testimony accompanies each bottle.

NOTICE.

AS the Furlough Pay of Officers on leave in this country from Regiments in India will, after the 1st of April, 1870, be issued at the India Office instead of through the Regimental Agents as heretofore, and as this step is preparatory to the issue of Officers' Pay in other cases without the necessary intervention of a Regimental Agent, with the view of excluding from the Army Estimates in future the charge for agency; we, the undersigned Regimental Agents, hereby give notice, that we are prepared to act as the Private Army Agents of Officers, and to draw their Full Pay, Furlough Pay, Half-pay, Retired Pay, or Pension, free of charge.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, February 25; Agra and Madras, February 23; Calcutta, February 22.

THE latest news from the Cachar frontier reports the Loshai raiders on their way homewards, laden with plunder and prisoners. It is rumoured however that one body of these savages was encamped on the Sonai river, looking out for some stores that were being forwarded to Mr. Edgar. Tidings from Messrs. Edgar and Burland had been received up to the 7th February, when their party were all well, but short of provisions. According to a telegram from General Bourcheir they were being fed by friendly Loshais, pending the arrival of Captain Lightfoot's detachment of the 44th N.I., which was expected to reach Mr. Edgar's camp with supplies on the 20th February. When the mail left, about six hundred troops in all had been collected at Silchar. The country in fact—writes a correspondent of the Englishman from Sylhet—"is bristling with troops sent in slow haste to drive out the Loshai hill robbers, but they have already returned to their fortresses in the hills." Their success in eluding pursuit is taken everywhere for granted, the only season in which pursuit is possible being nearly over.

LORD NAPIER OF MAGDALA was reported on the 6th February at Pebroogurh in Assam, whence he purposed riding on at once to a small outpost named Sudeah, about sixty miles further on. His Lordship, according to the Pioneer, had already found the inconvenience caused by the utter want of roads and telegraphs in Assam. He was expected to reach Sylhet on the 20th of the same month.

THE Landholders' and Commercial Association of British India have formally petitioned the Viceroy to give proper protection to the planters of Cachar from further inroads like the last. They complain of the disregard paid to their prayers for protection after the murderous inroads of 1869, and enlarge piteously on the lives lost, the amount of property damaged, and the fair hopes cruelly blighted by the yet more destructive inroad of this year.

BOMBAY has been startled by the joint suicide of Mr. Moroba Cannoba, late Judge in the Small Cause Court, and his wife, the Hindu widow whom he courted by advertisement about a year ago. They were fished up from the bottom of a well some distance from the house, locked in a loving embrace, with a woollen comforter tied round both their necks. Nothing certain was known as to the cause of their suicide, if suicide it was, and not, as some of their friends suspect, a case of murder. The former seems indeed the likelier solution, to judge from the well-known fact of Mr. Moroba's eccentricities and from various signs of prearrangement about the dress of his wife. The deceased gentleman, on retiring from his judgeship, had received a pension and the title of Rao Bahadoor. Not long afterwards he resumed practice at the Bombay bar. As an advanced reformer he had made himself conspicuous by his efforts to promote the remarriage of Hindu widows, and the advertisement he issued about a year ago for the hand of any widow of a certain age and without children, who would consent to marry him, evoked the laughter or the scorn of nearly all Bombay. There was method however in the seeming eccentricity, and a marriage was the result, followed by the excommunication of the daring couple. Little heeding the hate of their orthodox foes, they appear to have lived for some months happily enough. It is said however that the wife was jealous, not without reason, of her elderly husband. Better founded perhaps is the story which connects their end in some way with frequent quarrels about money between Moroba and his eldest son, with his own straitened circumstances, and with his growing estrangement from his own kith and kin. Any of these causes, acting on a passionate, somewhat flighty nature, might easily account for the subsequent tragedy.

THE opening of the State Railway from Oomrawuttee to the point of junction with the Great Indian Peninsular line took place on February 16. Hitherto the only connection between that thriving cotton-mart in the Berars and the nearest railway station has been offered by six miles of rough, dusty, hackary-road. The new branch, five miles and a-half long, has been finished in about four months at a cost of less than £5,000 a-mile, which includes a good many bridges built of stone brought from a distance, and based on very soft foundations. The work is said to have been very well done. Major Nembhard, the Commissioner, drove in the last key amidst a large gathering of natives and Europeans. This is the second of the new State lines, and both have been opened in the Berars. Speaking to this point at the breakfast after the opening, Major Mayne, the Superintending engineer, dwelt on the ease with which a third railway could be built by his present staff to connect Bombay with the Wurdah coal-fields, which promise to yield an unbounded supply of good coal for Central and Western India. He would "guarantee to open the coal mines, complete the railway, and supply the G.I.P. Railway Company with coal in twenty-two months from the date of commencing work." He hoped to be able to put coal into trucks at the pit's mouth for four rupees a ton. Mr. Rivett-Carnac spoke hopefully of India's cotton prospects. Even if English manufacturers should turn to America for the bulk of their raw supply, "still the cotton trade of Berar at the least is not altogether"—he said—"at the mercy of Manchester." The Berar cottons, he declared, had found much favour on the Continent of Europe, as being cheap, taking colour well, and suited to the Continental mills. It seems that it has not yet been determined whether the future railway shall run along the northern or southern side of the Wurdah River. The new coal-fields are also rich in excellent iron, a seam of which, from nine to seventeen feet thick, runs for ten miles side by side with the coal.

At the Viceregal Legislative Council on the 17th February, Mr. Chapman introduced his Bill for relieving the encumbered estates of the Broach Talookdars. His severe remarks on the Civil Courts of Bombay drew forth from Mr. Stephen a warm remonstrance against rash generalisations. A smart passage of rhetorical arms is said to have ensued, in which neither combatant beat the other.

A member of the Bombay Bar writes to us in the following strain touching the arrears of business in the High Court of Bombay.

"We are badly off for judges here on the original side. The late Chief Justice Couch thought that we might do with three, in the midst of the deficit; and we have only three now. But work is so behindhand now that every one is complaining. You never know when you will get a case on, and when on, how long it will take; because whenever there is urgent work to do, cases have to wait; and sometimes for two or three days a case gets only one, two, or three hours' hearing every day, instead of six. And you may imagine how it taxes the suitors without putting any more money into our pockets. By the end of this year we shall be dreadfully in arrears, not to speak of losses to plaintiffs through defendants becoming insolvent, and compromises forced. The fact is we are in want of another judge. Everyone here is crying out for another judge, though there is no public opinion here to affect or influence the Government."

The new scheme for transferring certain charges from the Supreme to the Local Governments is regarded with more or less misgiving in various quarters. In the North-West Provinces, in Bombay, and in Madras high official critics have found fault with it either for its inadequacy, the unfairness of its money allotments, or the doubtful character of its apparent aims. Timent Danaos et dona ferentes. Mr. Macfadyen, of the Madras Council, for one, liked the look of it very much at first, but has since discovered in it a plot for relieving the Central at the sole cost of the local Governments. The 79 lakhs made over to Madras are less by 52 lakhs than her share in the Estimates of 1870-71, which had themselves been "framed as famine estimates." Madras must, therefore, make up not only the deficiency of 52 lakhs (£520,000), but raise more money still for the future maintenance of her local services on a proper footing. This sort of decentralisation Mr. Macfayden likened to a one-sided application of the Scripture text, "Bear ye one another's burdens." "Just so," says the Government of India—"here, Madras, Bombay, &c., bear this burden; we are tired of it." Having thus delivered his mind, the speaker went on to accept the new scheme as a kind of step towards decentralisation of the proper sort, and to assent to certain measures of local taxation which the new fiscal policy of the Supreme Government made no longer a matter of choice.

Mr. Norton's criticism of the new Decentralisation Order pointed to the same conclusion couched in somewhat milder terms. The decentralisation he wished to see was a "real decentralisation," which would secure "perfect freedom on the one hand and careful supervision on the other," whereas the present scheme appeared to invert the order of things. Instead of saying, "Give me so much and you keep all the rest," it seemed to say, "I will give you so much and take all the rest," thus cutting off the local populations from the benefits of their own increasing wealth. Mr. Norton declined to feel very grateful for an insufficient measure ordained by a Government which must be obeyed. It was only as an experiment, as the insertion of the wedge's point, that he could hail the recent order. "It tends to open up such vast results, that our duty is to work it to its full, and by so doing put ourselves in a position to claim and be deemed worthy of the completest confidence of the Government of India." It had, anyhow, given them "a reasonable guarantee for local expenditure of local funds." In the forepart of his speech Mr. Norton dwelt impressively on the "sullen feeling of discontent" which recent fiscal measures had spread among the natives. "I remember," he said, "taking up one of the Madras papers at Tranquebar the other day, in which I counted no fewer than six or seven extracts from English and native newspapers, all full of discontent; and it is not too much to say that there is more discontent, if not more disaffection abroad now, than at any time since the Mutiny and rebellion of 1857. Within the last few months I have travelled eight hundred miles north and south of Madras, and within those limits I believe, on very competent authority, that a sullen and discontented spirit is abroad among the natives." This state of things, which he felt it his duty not to conceal, he ascribed partly to the unnecessary taxation and partly to "the galloping legislation" of late years. The Hindoos were, he thought, "as peacable, well-disposed, and easily satisfied a people as ever nation was called upon to govern;" but they would become troublesome and dangerous if, instead of leading, we insisted on driving them.

On Friday, March 17, the Income-tax Bill was debated in the Calcutta Council for seven hours before it was referred to a Select Committee. There was strong language used on both sides, according to the telegram. In answer to those who objected to making the tax permanent, Lord Mayo declared that the Government never intended to do such a thing. Messrs. Robinson and Inglis, members severally for Madras and the North-West, led the resistance to the Bill, over the form of which Sir W. Grey squabbled with Mr. Stephen, a supporter of the Bill. In his speech on the Government side Lord Napier of Magdala protested strongly against any further reduction of the army.

Among those members of Lord Mayo's Government who put their names to the Viceroy's expression of a belief that "substantial justice" has been done already to the claimants of bonus compensation, we are glad to remark the absence of Lord Napier of Magdala. It is satisfactory to know that Major-General Norman stands alone, of the Indian military chiefs, in his approval of the instructions by which Lord Cranborne mocked the hopes of officers who were ready to accept the most moderate compensation for their just dues. The head of the Indian Army is at one with both the minor governments in maintaining that due regard has not been paid to the interests of Indian officers in this matter. The shortest and simplest way of showing that regard would be to reimburse each claimant two-thirds or one-half the sum he would have received as bonus under the old regulations. It would be easy to strike an average between the several scales adopted in different regiments, and pay each officer a certain percentage on his calculated share. Probably some officers would cry quits with the India Office for a reasonable addition to their pensions.

Sir W. Mansfield's promotion to a peerage will set a good many people wondering at the cause of this new piece of good-fortune. What has he done to deserve it? He has not even had the luck to carry a small army successfully through a safe and almost bloodless campaign. Still less did he ever do anything to rival the well-earned renown of Lord Strathnairn. His greatest military achievement was connected in some way or another with General Wyndham's ill-managed defence of Cawnpore; and his most distinguished passage of arms was the prosecution of his aide-de-camp for making free with his pickles and jams. The shout of derision from one end of India to the other, which greeted his farewell assurance that he left the whole Indian Army in the most perfect state of discipline and efficiency, had hardly died away, when his successor publicly deplored the insubordinate tendencies of his European troops, while the utter absurdity of the present mode of officering the native army has long been a standing grievance with most of the Indian newspapers. But then Sir William is supposed by his friends to have a genius for administration, on the strength of his having done something in that line in the Indian Council, rather to the detriment of his proper business; and the merits of an officer of his high connections must not be too carefully scrutinised by envious outsiders. It has moreover been suggested that the Ministry are in want of an able champion of army reform in the Upper House; and so for one reason or another Sir William is to be made a peer.

The Indian Finance Committee had their preliminary meeting last week. On Friday next we understand they will set to work; the first witness called up being Mr. R. D. Mangles, who will have much no doubt to say on the Bengal revenue question.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

TUESDAY, March 21, 1871.

THE MINISTERIAL ARMY BILL.

After five nights of not very profitable or pertinent talk, Mr. Cardwell's Army Bill has passed its second reading, and the doom of the Purchase System has been pronounced not more decisively by the votes of Mr. Gladstone's supporters than by the arguments of its own defenders. To justify the system on its own merits was more than any speaker ventured in so many words to try, and the only one plausible argument in its favour, its usefulness, namely, in quickening promotion, could not of itself have kept the debate alive for many hours in the face of so many solid reasons for its suppression. There are other ways, too, of quickening promotion which a Government, determined on having an efficient body of officers, could easily devise at no great cost to the country. If the people are resolved on supporting the Government in this matter, the question of expense in compensating present interests becomes a secondary consideration. If the system itself must be abolished sooner or later, and the cost of abolishing it grows with every year's delay, all we can say is, "'twere better it were done quickly;" and it is only sound policy to compensate in a generous spirit those who stand in the way of a needful reform. But it is certainly a strange phenomenon to find so many nominal friends of the army quarrelling with the terms of a compensation as handsome as the officers specially concerned could well desire. Compare their case with that of the old Indian Army in the matter of Bonus compensation, and the difference in the treatment of the two services can be explained only on the principle that justice, as a rule, is rendered only to the strong. While the old Company's officers have hitherto asked in vain for the equivalent of that Bonus to which each on retirement was legally entitled by the rules of his service, as confirmed by two Acts of Parliament, Mr. Cardwell has promised that every officer now holding a saleable commission in her Majesty's service shall on retirement receive a sum equal to the saleable value of his commission, as such value may stand on the day when all sales of commissions shall have ceased under the new Act. In defining the "estimated price" at which a commission will be saleable until the passing of the Army Regulation Bill, he expressly includes "the over-regulation price," that is the "customary sum, if any, payable beyond the regulation price." There is no talk here of ignoring claims founded on a practice absolutely illegal; still less of deducting from the value of a commission the increase of pay consequent on the purchase of previous steps. Mr. Cardwell's offers are not made in the spirit of a cunning pettifogger. His plan of reimbursing Queen's officers according to a scale sanctioned by the custom of their service in the teeth of express law, stands out in bright relief against Lord Cranborne's scheme for pretending to reimburse Indian officers the money—and only the money—they had laid out in purchasing steps, under a system expressly sanctioned by the Government of the day acting in conformity with existing laws. Now that her Majesty's officers are assured of more than justice at the hands of their countrymen, we may be excused for demanding that less than mere justice shall no longer be meted out to their comrades of the old Indian Army.

In default of sounder arguments Colonel Loyd Lindsay and his followers busied themselves in throwing as much dust as possible into the eyes of the uninformed. They talked as if they really believed that the Purchase System and the Regimental System must stand or fall together. We heard a good deal about the excellence of our army under Wellington, and the charge of the Light Brigade at Balaklava was cited in all seriousness as a specimen of British proficiency in the art of war. Then again we were reminded that the purchase system had been current in the English Army for the last two hundred years, and some bold speakers went so far as to avow their belief that officers who could not afford to buy steps were all nevertheless in favour of a process which promoted juniors over their heads. It was curious too to note how vehement an attack was made on the principle of selection by merit by speakers who warmly approved the worst possible mode of selection, that namely by length of purse. The frequent protests uttered against the downfall of a system which is supposed to officer the British Army with gentlemen betrayed an amusing blindness to the fact that no branch of our army contains in proportion so many gentlemen, in all senses of the word, as the Engineer and Artillery Services, which know nothing of the purchase system. Money can work wonders, but culture will always beat it hollow as a means of producing officers and gentlemen. If the only alternative to rising by purchase were unlimited promotion from the ranks, we might well shrink from abolishing purchase; but there is not the slightest reason to foresee the near advent of a day when the bulk of English officers shall consist of promoted sergeants. What the nation does want is a body of officers fitted to command not only by their feats in the ball-room and the hunting-field, but rather by their thorough knowledge of the work they are especially required to do. The officers of infantry and cavalry ought in a less degree to resemble in all respects those of the Ordnance Corps. Whatever good there is in the regimental system, and much there is to say in its favour, was far better exemplified in the old Company's European Army, where seniority was the rule of promotion, than it has ever been in an army where officers are continually exchanging into other regiments or selling out altogether after a few years' service. Up to the rank of major promotion might still go, we think, by seniority tempered by the sifting process of mild examinations. Promotion by purchase once abolished, it will become possible for the sons of poor gentlemen to win their way upwards and to suit their manner of living to their means, instead of struggling for ever with the two-fold weight of their own poverty and the expensive habits of those wealthy comrades who inevitably give the tone to the regiments in which they predominate.

By abolishing purchase, moreover, the ground will at once be cleared for necessary reforms in the way of reducing the number and improving the pay of the officers. Both these ends will to some extent be furthered by doing away with the rank of ensign and cornet, so that no officer will begin upon less than the present pay of a lieutenant, or about £120 a-year, and the number of regimental officers would at once be reduced by about a fourth, to something like the proportion of officers in a foreign battalion. A judicious pruning of the field-officers would leave more money free towards increasing the pay of the commissioned ranks, or starting a retirement fund for the reformed service. Such a fund might be helped out by small monthly cuttings from the increased pay which must be granted for the maintenance of an army of working officers. Under any system of thorough training twenty officers will do the work which thirty under the present system make but a show of doing; but then those twenty must be paid for their work. Competent officers would also enable us to keep up in peace-time a large proportion of mere skeleton battalions, at a material saving of expense.

With regard to one part of Mr. Cardwell's scheme there are difficulties on which only one or two speakers, such as Messrs. Eastwick and Bernal Osborne, laid sufficient stress. The latter was particularly anxious to know "how the army of the future in India was to be created" under a system of short enlistments. Mr. Cardwell's explanation does not remove the difficulty altogether. It is easy to say that men will be enlisted for six years' service in India, but how are two or three different terms of enlistment to be combined effectively in one army? Will not such a process lead to endless confusion and much eventual waste of power? Mr. Eastwick hit the true mark in proposing to maintain a separate local army for India. To this complexion we must come sooner or later, if we ever come to our senses on this point at all. Nothing would simplify the question of army reconstruction so much as the entire separation of the home and foreign services. In the case of India this separation would be nothing new, and it is an undoubted fact that no regiments of the British Army surpassed in real discipline and tried efficiency the old Company's regiments of infantry and artillery. The very conditions of service out there tended to multiply and strengthen those bonds of fellowship and mutual regard which make discipline a reality and ensure good soldierly service in time of need.

THE BANK OF BENGAL.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

Sir,—Once more I venture, through your columns, to call the attention of the shareholders in Europe to the so-called half-yearly report from the directors of the Bank of Bengal, just received.

The brevity of the present report secures you against the risk of my intruding at any length upon your space, for it would be difficult from the data furnished to find matter for lengthy argument or discussion.

The first paragraph of the report is one setting forth a fact that no one will dispute—viz., that the directors "submit their usual periodical report on the Bank's transactions at the head office and branches"—for it is precisely the same bald and unbusiness-like production with which the present management of the Bank thinks to quiet the fears and stop the mouths each half-year of "those meddling people at home," who are curious and importunate to know why the Bank of Bengal is slowly, but surely and continuously, deteriorating in profit, and its shares diminishing in value?

The succeeding paragraph is, however, a master stroke of "easy assurance," for we are told that "the nature and safety of the Bank's advances have had the special attention of the board, and measures have been taken to restrict the discounts within safe limits,"—in other words, the directors have done what they are placed there to do, and are paid for doing, their duty—a duty the performance of which, during the past half-year, would not appear to have been conspicuous for its successful results, since the accounts show an item of over £7,000 for bad debts!

The concluding paragraph informs us that "the branches continue to work satisfactorily," from which we are allowed, and, of course, intended to infer, that the whole of the eighteen branches which are (ill-natured people say) sapping the vitals of the Mother Bank, are, and have hitherto been, sources of comfort and credit to their parents, and of profit to us poor shareholders.

Sir, I, for one, do not believe it, and if anything could confirm the misgivings I feel, and have in your columns more than once expressed, it would be the persistent and most unbecoming reticence of the board of directors, and their adherence to a stereotyped form of report which says nothing, and conceals everything.

If the shareholders in Europe do not choose, however, to look after their own interests, if they see unmoved the market value of the Bank shares daily dwindling both in India and Europe, if they are content with the dividend of 5½ per cent. from an institution which for a quarter of a century before the establishment of the branches paid a dividend ranging from 12 to 20 per cent., if they can read without disgust and indignation the so-called "report," thrown to them as a sort of supercilious concession to an old fashioned prejudice which exacts from a well-paid executive a periodical semblance of candour and show of zeal, nothing that can be said will avail, but the day will come when they will have cause to regret their supineness, and to lament the blind confidence with which they have allowed the interests of the Bank—a Bank that once held its head above all similar establishments in India and Europe—to be sacrificed to incompetence, and its large and legitimate profits frittered away through mismanagement.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

SOLDIERS' WIVES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

Sir,—In the discussions on Army Reform, I do not find that any attention has been paid to the important question of the marriage of soldiers.

It is with reference to our mighty army in India that I would call particular attention. I think that it will be admitted that commanding officers, as a rule, discourage the marriage of the soldiers of their regiments, and consider married women and soldiers' children a great encumbrance.

The question is, Would permission to soldiers to marry after five years' good service in India improve the efficiency of her Majesty's Army?

The hill stations have been so multiplied and enlarged that Government need find no difficulty in accommodating the families of its European soldiers in them.

The real strength of our army in India would be doubled if we were to substitute strong, active, steady, married men for the numerous poor syphilitic wretches who crowd our hospitals and graveyards, who, as Shakespeare says, are made roast meat for worms; and who, if they escape death for a time, have to be invalided and sent home at a great expense to the State.

It would be well to publish a return showing the number of soldiers invalided during the past ten years for syphilitic rheumatism, and the enormous sums which have had to be paid for them out of the Indian Exchequer.

It is in vain for the Government to try to cure this kind of rheumatism by the Contagious Diseases Act, and to employ official examiners and medical art without discountenancing immorality. God's laws will not be thus evaded. He whose word cannot be broken has said, "Shall I not visit for these things, saith the Lord, and shall not thy soul be avenged on such a nation as this."

Let us take warning from the British disasters in the Afghan war, and from the French defeats last year.—Yours faithfully,

March 16. T.

MR. FORSYTH AND THE MAHARAJAH OF KASHMERE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

Sir,—The Lahore journal, meaning, I presume, Indian Public Opinion, quoted by English contemporaries, has heard that Mr. Forsyth proceeds immediately to England, and boasts that he will not forget to lay certain matters connected with a feudatory before the Secretary of State, and, if need be, before the public of England.

The "feudatory" means, of course, the Maharajah of Kashmere, against whom Mr. Forsyth loses no opportunity of bringing accusations, sometimes with a bare shadow of truthfulness, but more frequently with a foundation of credulity in idle tales poured into his willing ear. But that he should reserve "certain matters" connected with "the feudatory" in question for the special ear of the Secretary of State on arrival in England, when he had the opportunity of communicating all he knew personally to the Governor-General, it is difficult to understand. Is it because he has not found an attentive listener in Lord Mayo, or because he thinks he may succeed in securing greater attention in Downing-street than was lent to him at Government House? I am strongly inclined to believe in the latter alternative, for, according to popular rumour, Lord Mayo has officially expressed himself entirely satisfied with the conduct of the Maharajah of Kashmere, and found no ground for the insinuations that have from time to time been thrown out against that chief, who has, especially of late years, shown himself most anxious in every way to meet the wishes of the British Government whenever he has been asked to make concessions in the interest of trade or science.

I assume, possibly incorrectly, that Mr. Forsyth had a hand in the publication of the paragraph I have quoted. I hope it is not so, and that he has been fathered with a notion he has not entertained, but his known leanings against "the feudatory" tempt me strongly to believe that he has prompted this one.

Spirit of the Indian Press.

THE UNCOVENANTED SERVICES.

The Indian Daily News maintains that it is a delusion that the Government of India ought, on moral, political, equitable, or any other grounds, to be exclusively, or even mainly, carried on through native agency; and proposes to show that the native demand as of right for a monopoly of posts involves great confusion of ideas. Suppose, for the sake of argument, that the natives of this country were morally and physically unfitted for positions of responsibility and trust, it is clear that it would amount to madness to thrust them into such positions only because they were natives. Now, we by no means contend that the natives, as a rule, are unfitted for such positions; but we do contend that the first consideration, on which all selections are made, must be a consideration of individual fitness and not a consideration of race. No race, as a race, which owes a duty to humanity, is entitled, as of right, to misgovern itself—least of all can such a title be advanced by a conquerred race, which, to say the least, has not yet proved its superiority to its conquerors and their descendants. It may possibly be susceptible of proof that, where a native and a European candidate are perfectly equal in all respects, the preference should, on certain grounds (which, however, are relative, and not absolute), be given to the native, who claims to serve his own country; but even this admission can only go to show that the native ought to be chosen because he is superior or equal to his rival, and not because he is a native. If then, a special fitness for the duty assigned should form the primary consideration in regulating selections for appointments, the theory of a native right to preferential employment must fall to the ground. As to what constitutes special fitness for Indian appointments at the present day, we apprehend that the several governments in India are better judges than either the Secretary of State for India or natives who have seldom stepped out of the presidency towns. It will be seen that we advocate nominations from all classes of her Majesty's subjects, with exclusive reference to their fitness for offices of trust, while the native admirers of the order of the Secretary of State would seem to advocate a preferential selection of natives because they are natives, to the exclusion of all Europeans and East Indians. As a matter of fact, as was very recently shown by a native newspaper, by far the largest proportion of the best appointments in the Uncovenanted Civil Service is already in the hands of natives—principally Bengalis. What more can be expected? We simply desire that merit should carry the day, and that no restrictions based on race considerations should be imposed. It is mostly the so-called educated Bengali of Calcutta—who has received his varnish of civilisation at some Government College, at the expense of the labouring poor—who clamours for an acknowledgment of his exclusive right to preferential employment, not only in Bengal, of which, as a province, he knows little enough, but also in Oude, the Punjab, and the non-regulation provinces, in all of which he is practically as much a foreigner as a European or East Indian.

INDIAN RAILWAYS.

The Delhi Gazette asks whether any of the local magnates in Bengal perceive the necessity of following the lead of the Central Provinces in the matter of these State Railways? Mr. Rivett-Carnac, we believe, has the honour of having forced on their adoption in the Central Provinces; we should be glad to see him use similar exertions on behalf of some of the largest and most flourishing towns in the North-West Provinces that are studiously neglected by the Solons of the East Indian Railway. The most shameful instances of this neglect occur with regard to the towns of Hattras and Ghazeepore. The former is certainly next to Cawnpore the most flourishing town in the Doab. It is peopled to a large extent by Marwarees, the most energetic commercial class in India, who have direct transactions with Calcutta, Bombay, and other large towns, who are besides the principal supporters of the trade in native indigo, one firm alone having despatched 5,000 maunds in a single season to Calcutta. Yet it is denied the advantages of railway communication; the line having by some unaccountable blunder been carried through an open plain, about six miles to the east of it, thus necessitating the employment of bullock carts and shigrams for that distance. The consequences may be easily imagined. During the brisk season the time of every merchant and trader connected with Hattras is principally occupied in traversing the distance between that city and the railway station; while an array of bullocks carts arrayed along the narrow metalled road that connects the two, renders the exercise of the Christian virtue of patience a duty of an extremely onerous and disagreeable character. In vain has this anomaly been pointed out to the railway officials. With an air of infinite wisdom they prefer to go their own way, which consists principally in erecting works for the benefit of the creatures that inhabit the Rajmahal hills rather than of those who cultivate the densely peopled plains of Upper India. The Chord line is for the present, at least, rather an incubus on the shoulders of the East Indian Railway. It reduces the mileage on goods and passengers from the N.W.P., and thus lessens the receipts; while the necessity for keeping open the communications along the Loop Line causes a heavy strain to be put on the working of the Traffic and Locomotive departments. Indeed, the Chord Line seems to be looked upon with disgust by the officials of that portion of the railway who are compelled to travel over it. The gradients are steep and the road is rough, defects which are apt to try the nerves of men accustomed to the easy gradients of the Loop line. But to return. The cost of a single line of railway from the Hattras Railway Station to the city ought not to cost more than £20,000. The adjoining line from Toondla to Allygurh was made for about £1,000 a mile, exclusive of permanent way and rolling stock. We see no reason why a branch line six miles in length, with light rails, but maintaining the ordinary gauge of 5ft. 6in. should not be constructed for £3,000 a mile. The goods traffic might safely be reckoned upon to the extent of 50,000 tons per annum, which, at 1d. a ton per mile, would yield an annual income of £1,250, in addition to what may be expected from passenger receipts. Thus it seems that there would be no difficulty in paying the £900 sterling of interest which is all that Government would be liable for were it to borrow £20,000 at 4½ per cent.; and we strongly advise the local Government, now that the principle of decentralisation is gaining ground, to pay more attention to such schemes than it has hitherto done.

THE RAJAH OF ANAGOONDY.—The young Rajah of Anagoondy, a feudatory of the Nizam, died on Tuesday, Feb. 12. His brother aspires to the throne.

THE SHERVAROYS.—According to the Neilgherry paper the Shervaroys, situated in the valley of Salem, rise to an elevation of 2,500 feet on the eastern, and 5,300 feet on the western side. Yercaud, the principal European station, is 4,300 feet above the sea. The climate is exceedingly temperate, and the temperature but slightly variable, the thermometer marking 75 degrees in the hottest, and seldom below 65 degrees in the coolest months. The mean temperature of Yercaud is given as 70 degrees. The rainy reasons commence—the south-west at the end of May or beginning of June, and the north-east in October; the latter is accompanied with the heaviest rain. The diseases to which the native inhabitants are exposed are small-pox, fever, bowel complaints, and cholera. Most of the European residents and visitors, in the months of May and June, suffer from quotidian intermittents, and in several instances the fever assumes a remittent form. Amongst the cultivated vegetable productions of the Shervaroys are wheat, potatoes, sinapis, loquat, oranges, lemon, lime, and shaddock; the absence of the rhododendron from the wild is very remarkable, pointing, as Dr. Shortt observes, "to the inferior elevation of the hills" compared with that of Coonoor. The coffee plant grows on the Shervaroys, and so does the tea. The former was "naturalised about forty years since by Mr. Cockburn, late of the Madras Civil Service, who, during his official connection with the Salem district, took great interest in developing the resources of these hills. He planted several acres of land, and the original trees are still in existence, some of them of large size and capable of yielding, when in full bearing, twenty-five pounds of cleaned coffee each. At the present time there are upwards of 5,000 acres of land under coffee cultivation." The tea plant "was introduced many years ago by Mr. Fischer, from seed supplied to him by Dr. Wallich. Some plants are to be found on the estates of Messrs. Fischer and Richardson; they grow to the height of twenty feet, and flower and seed freely. The plants have not been cultivated with a view to the manufacture of tea, but there seems no reason why it should not succeed as well, or even better than coffee." The fauna of the Shervaroys consists, amongst animals, of the tiger, leopard, bear, bison, wild hog, jungle sheep, mouse-deer, hyena, jackal, hare, jungle cat, &c.; amongst birds, of jungle and spur fowl, partridge, quail, wild pigeon, woodcock, and snipe. "A few snakes, mostly harmless varieties, are to be met with, and two or three species of viper. I cannot learn," says Dr. Shortt, "that the cobra has been found at the elevation of Yercaud." It seems, however, to be found at lower elevations, for a cobra was killed on Mr. Renconter's estate—elevation not given.

THE LOSHAI RAID.

Extract from a letter addressed to Mr. James Young by Mr. G. G. Sellar from Alexanderpore, Cachar, 15th February, 1871 :—

"Since I last wrote to you one of my coolie women escaped from the Loshais, and has given very useful information. She was in a very exhausted state when brought into this garden by the guard from the Sylhet range, but rest and good feeding have brought her round rapidly. She tells her story in a very clear and connected way, and answered all the questions put to her by Mr. Metcalfe (the subdivisional officer in Hylakandi) in a decided and most intelligent manner. Her description of the raid and her escape is as follows :—

"She was in the coolie lines about noon on the day of attack (the 23rd), was caught hold of by two Loshais (she calls them Kookies), bound with cord, and dragged along with the other prisoners a short way into the jungle. She says there were about sixty Loshais, all armed with spears and daos, and that about ten or twelve of them had guns. She does not know about the attack on Cutleechurra that day further than that three of the Cutleechurra coolies were brought in prisoners that afternoon. She saw the burning of Alexanderpore bungalow and factory, and the Loshais carrying the loot into the jungles during the afternoon. That night they all remained upon a high teelah in a jungle within a stone's throw of my bungalow teelah. At daybreak next morning about one-half of the Loshais went off to attack Cutleechurra, leaving the other half to guard the captives and loot. During the day three dead Loshais were brought in, and in the afternoon a hurried retreat commenced.

"At first they went day and night at the foot of the high range; the Loshais made sacrifice; they killed an old bearded coolie and cooked rice on his body. They again made sacrifice when they reached the top of the range at the junction of the Pharees to Alexanderpore, and the one running direct north to opposite the Bengal Tea Company's factories. The victim this time was my head syce, Juggro; besides cutting his head off they otherwise mutliated his body in a shocking manner. Shortly after this a coolie was shot down, because he complained of the tightness of the cord he was tied with. In all seven coolies (including the khansaman's wife) were murdered on the march before she effected her escape. The only reason she could assign for this barbarity was that they did not move along fast enough.

"On the night of the eighth day she managed with her teeth to undo the cords that bound her, escaped, and hid herself in the jungle before daylight. At dawn she could see at a short distance four of the Loshais in search of her, and so terrified was she that her child would make a noise that she stuffed a cloth into its mouth, and shortly after the four men disappeared. In four days' time she reached the new guard which has been placed on the top of the range that forms the Cachar and Sylhet boundary (this is the track by which the Loshais came and went). She was so exhausted and so terrified at seeing armed men again that she fell away in a faint, but the cries of her child attracted the attention of the sentinel of the guard, who immediately went to her relief. She says they treated her very kindly, and afterwards brought her down to Barrykandy with the utmost care. There she had every comfort and attention that could be devised, and in a couple of days was so recovered as to be able to stand the fatigue of being carried down in a dooli to the Hylakandy Thannah to be examined by Mr. Metcalfe.

"Of captives there were alive on the day of her escape six women, three men, and four children, exclusive of poor Winchester's daughter Mary and the three Cutleechurra coolies. Besides seven coolies murdered during the retreat, and nine bodies found and buried on Alexanderpore, including Ka Sing, the Cossia Sirdarnee, there are other seven coolies who have never been seen or heard of since the 23rd ult. One man came out on the Barrykandy Teelahs after having been eleven days in the jungle without food except a handful of cheera (or parched rice) he happened to have tied up in his cloth while out pruning at the time of the attack.

"'Sabeetree,' the woman who escaped, says, the Loshais are taking great care of Winchester's child. They carry her in their arms, feed her twice a day on roasted rice, mixed with goor, and give her eggs once a day. She is an extremely fair and a very intelligent child, and from this careful treatment I would infer that they place no small value on the possession of her. The child of my khansaman was also carried away alive. You would scarcely believe it possible that men could survive the fearful hacking and spear thrusts that some of the Cutleechurra and my escaped coolies got. A strong junglee coolie of mine had three dao cuts on the back of his neck, two of which were three inches long and one and a quarter inch deep. He is being looked after at Bundookmara by the native dresser, under the superintendence of Dr. Coulter, and is recovering so rapidly that I expect in the course of another week his wounds will have completely healed up. But he is naturally of a strong constitution. The Cutleechurra coolies returned to that garden yesterday, and once they get settled down to work again I intend taking my coolies up to Cutleechurra, where they will stay at night, and work at Alexanderpore in the day time under the protection of a small guard that has been assigned to me.

"I hope soon to complete arrangements for local Bengalee labour, and trust to have some new lines, &c., erected by the end of March. Up to the present I have not been able to get a Bengalee to work in the place. The very name of Alexanderpore makes them shudder, with horror, and those who now feel inclined to go are demanding double rates."

STATION TALK.

Indore, Feb. 10.—The new year appears to be fraught with changes for us; a bright day is surely in store for this part of India. First and foremost then, I have to chronicle a new line of railway from Indore to Neemuch, eventually, perhaps, to join the Rajpootana line, and thus bring us into direct communication with the north-west. The staff to survey the line is already assembling here, under the superintendence of Mr. Miller, an American engineer of proved ability, and comparatively a young man, perhaps the youngest now on the list of superintending engineers. You will doubtless remember that some time back the Secretary of State, at the instance of the Viceroy, endeavoured to obtain the services of an American engineer, one of those giants who connected the Atlantic and the Pacific with an iron road, unparalleled in the world for its length and speedy construction. The negotiations, however, broke off, as the engineer elect insisted as a sine qua non that he should be free to select his own men. This point, as might have been expected, the Government of India could not yield, having regard to the army of military men unemployed, who have to be provided for out of the revenues of the country. Whether Mr. Miller is the gentleman originally selected for service in India or not I am not in a position to say. However this may be, the worst pessimists must now admit that a new era is dawning on the P. W. D.; and a few more such selections and a few more remands will soon dispel the opprobrium in which the department has hitherto been incrusted. Lord Mayo certainly seems determined to leave a name behind him in the annals of the country; and it must be conceded that since his Lordship took charge of the Public Works portfolio, the promise to substitute action for red tapeism seems at last near realisation. Next comes the Money Order Agency, a desideratum long felt; its establishment is hailed by all classes as a great boon. Mr. Billings, the Controller of P. W. accounts, has returned to Bengal; Mr. J. Harding, late of British Burmah, has taken up the duties; this gentleman comes amongst us with a reputation for high literary attainments, and it is earnestly hoped that he will take as great an interest in providing intellectual recreation, in the shape of debating or reading clubs as he is said to have done in Rangoon. As far as I have been able to learn no place in India has paid greater respect to the memory of poor Sir Henry Durand than where he earned his laurels as a political. When the volcano burst forth in 1857, spreading lamentation and woe throughout the country, Sir Henry Durand was the agent here; and though the tombstones in the lonely cemetery bear silent testimony to the bloody deeds of the insurgents, it is generally admitted on all hands that but for the promptitude of action and bold front put on by him the blood-dyed hands of the ruffians would have made greater havoc and swept away every vestige of British rule; so when the news of his untimely death arrived the people delighted to honour the memory of departed worth. A solemn fast for two days was proclaimed, and all shops were ordered to be closed. In order to enforce it rigidly peons from the kotwalee patrolled the streets, and compelled all buying and selling to cease. One remarkable feature in this, as marking our indifference to all conventional customs, was that all offices were open. The people were expected to work on empty stomachs, for the prohibition to sell is a prohibition of the use of the articles sold.

Chinsurah, Feb. 10.—The other day at a village called Bally, an outpost of the district bordering on Hooghly, an infant of two or three months was very nearly carried off by a jackal. The hour was neither dawn nor dusk, but broad day-light, about nine in the morning, and the mother while busying herself with domestic matters within the house, had left it out in the sun to derive warmth from its beams, as native mothers very often do. The cries of the infant soon attracted her attention, as also that of the neighbours, who fortunately came out in time to rescue the poor innocent from the fangs of the brute before they made any serious impression. This is not the first time that a child has been the victim to the rapacity of these creatures. Last year one of them succeeded in carrying away an infant from about the same locality, nor could it be compelled into relinquishing its prey till closely pressed. Jackals apparently play the same part down here as wolves do higher up the country, and some step in the way of rewards should, I think, be taken for their extermination. The village in question is infested with their presence both by night and day, and to preserve an inactivity under the circumstances would be equivalent to setting little store on human life. Joggery, which forms the staple manufacture of the village, appears to be their attraction, and war to the death should be the repulsion.—Young Bengal has proved himself to be a detective of no mean order. In the investigation of a recent murder case in the Mofussil, a Bengalee sub-inspector of police allowed himself to be so imposed on by the astuteness of the real culprit as to engage him as principal witness for the prosecution, and at his instigation to arrest another and innocent person; and it is doubtful what other absurdities or excesses he might have been led into had not the advent of a superior and more enlightened officer on the scene taken the case out of his hands. Both the commissioner and the magistrate of the district passed some severe strictures on his glaring incompetency; indeed the former went so far as to remark that his retention in the force was not desirable; but the district superintendent, on account of his youth and inexperience (how comes it then that he filled so responsible a post?), contented himself with degrading him to a lower office, which, besides loss of position, will entail a pecuniary loss of thirty rupees per mensem.

ULWUR.—It is some time since I wrote to you, and now that I have the opportunity of supplying you with further information, I would it were in my power to say that things are improving, or, rather, that the Chief was improving. It is painful to have to say that notwithstanding all your warning and advice, couched in strong though kindly terms, the Chief has not yet shown any disposition to reform and improve. He persists in the unseemly conduct that brought him under the displeasure of his people and the British Government. The bacchanalian revelries of which he has always been fond are still his favourite occupation. His fallen Highness has not yet learnt a lesson for the better. Far from showing any inclination to reform, and to come to terms with his brotherhood, the Rajpoots, he has been betraying feelings of the bitterest enmity towards them. Secret correspondence with the intriguers at Delhi, who have done so much injury to the chief himself, as well as to the State he rules, is still kept up, it is said, through certain attendants of his Highness. I may not give publicity to their names, though here they are on the lips of every one. Another sad event, worth recording, is the unexpected and untimely death of the Maharanee Jhaluju, the eldest of the four wives of the Chief, and the daughter of the Rajnana of Jhallawar. She breathed her last on the 20th December. Rumour has it that the Maharanee was not labouring under any actual disease, but that she sunk under heavy grief caused by the death of her son. The Political Agent is busily engaged in introducing order and management, but it will take him some time to secure reform and good administration, as mismanagement and disorder have been prevailing for so many years. Records of thousands of undecided cases were lying in the several courts of justice, and the Political Agent has directed his attention to this. He has enjoined upon the heads of departments the necessity of deciding these cases as soon as possible. Efforts are being made to clear off the files within a reasonable time. With regard to the amlah of the courts and other officials, the Political Agent has taken a very wise step in raising their salaries, which were reduced by the Chief, to their former standard, in order to secure an efficient working system, and to leave them no excuse for having recourse to dishonest means of augmenting their incomes. Both the P. A. and the Deputy Collector are out on tour in the Tehseels, and it is expected that the personal supervision of these officers will be conducive of good and favourable results to the people at large. Captain Cadell is becoming more and more popular because of his justice, industry, and affability. He gives audience daily to the people in general, and lends a willing and patient ear to their complaints and grievances. All arrears of pay have, to the great satisfaction of those concerned, been paid off; and zemindars are no longer required to pay revenue three months before it is due, as they were obliged to do under the late administration, thus saving, besides a great deal of inconvenience, the amount of interest which they had to pay on money borrowed to meet the peremptory demands of the Raj. One may see satisfaction and returning prosperity depicted on the countenances of the poor and the oppressed, whose claims had hitherto been overlooked; because in the Political Agent they find a protector of their rights and one who is ever ready to help them with a free hand whenever their grievances come to his notice. For all the misrule and tyranny which prevailed in the State the Chief of Ulwar is not altogether to blame. He has been a mere instrument in the hands of others, who have been wielding him as they liked. It is surprising that the real promoters of all the wrong-doing, the instigators of the Chief, the disturbers of the public peace, I mean the shrewd cunning Mahomedans of Delhi, who were all along at the bottom of every plot and conspiracy that was concocted, are still, some of them, allowed to hang about the Chief and lurk in the city, serving as means of communication between his Highness and his old Delhi favourites. Why are not prompt measures taken to put a stop to all this at once? I think it could be very easily done if Captain Cadell were to adopt firm measures. My object in requesting you to give publicity to what I know to be the opinion of the public of Ulwur is to draw the attention of the P. A. as well as of the Government of India to it. Both are, I see, ready to adopt such measures that may prove effectual in securing complete reform and good administration.—Delhi Gazette Correspondent.

CONSUL-GENERAL FOR AMERICA.—The Viceroy has recognised the appointment of Mr. Marsh Giddings as Consul-General for America in Calcutta, in succession to Dr. Jacobs.

Miscellaneous.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.—Lord Napier, with his staff, was expected to have reached Sylhet on February 18.

RAILWAYS.—The Indian Daily News tells us that the third instalment of Rs. 6,25,000 on account of the Holkar Railway Loan has recently been paid by the Durbar at Indore to the British authorities, and made over to the Bank of Bombay.

THE MURDER OF MR. HAYWARD.—Indian Public Opinion says:—"Is murder to be perpetrated with impunity? At last the clue to Mr. Hayward's death has been found, and any complicity in it has been indignantly denied by the people and ruler of Yassen."

GENERAL CUNNINGHAM, the head of the Archæological Survey, has arrived at Benares. He is busily engaged, if we believe the Pioneer, in examining the barracks lately occupied by the 19th Hussars, and other highly interesting ruins in the neighbourhood.

INSPECTION OF THE NORTH-EAST FRONTIER.—The Bengal Times says:—"It is believed that General Bourchier intends traversing the whole frontier to inspect our out-posts, and to adopt such steps as may seem necessary to strengthen them, in view to the prevention of further raids."

TELEGRAPH RATES.—The Government of India, we are informed, has communicated with the Sublime Porte through the wires on the subject of the new rates charged for messages. The Great Turk replies that he will not alter his charges, and so the public need not pay the high rates demanded by the British conspiracy unless they like.—Englishman.

JODHPORE.—The Secretary of State, in a recent despatch, has approved of the suspension of the salutes of the Maharajah of Jodhpore for two years, and of the reduction thereof from seventeen to thirteen guns after the expiration of that period, as a mark of the displeasure of the Government of India at his having failed to attend the political durbar at Ajmere. These recommendations emanated from the Indian Government.

PUBLIC WORKS.—On the return of Colonel Dickens, R.A., from furlough he will resume his appointment of Secretary to Government in the D. P. W., and Colonel Strachey, R.E., at present officiating, will take furlough to Europe. A report that Colonel Strachey would be appointed adviser of the Secretary of State on engineering subjects has been contradicted. There is no intention as yet of making a new appointment in England of the kind described.

MILITARY.—We regret to learn from the Lahore paper of the occurrence of a great many cases of insubordination and other military offences among the non-commissioned officers of the 5th Lancers at Sealkote.—It is said that Colonel Woodcock, lately commanding the Royal Artillery in the Saugor District, will take command of the five batteries of Royal Horse Artillery recently ordered to England.—The F Battery C Brigade arrived at Allahabad on Sunday, Feb. 15, on its way via Jubbulpore to Bombay and England.

ACCIDENT TO COLONEL JOHNSTONE, C.B.—We are sorry to learn that Colonel N. C. Johnstone, C.B., Deputy Superintendent Revenue Survey of the North-West Frontier, Punjab, met with a severe accident a few days since while on duty in the Dera Ghazee Khan district. Colonel Johnstone was proceeding at a gallop, when his horse, from some cause or other, came down and rolled over, crushing the left leg of his rider severely, but without breaking any bones, and with the exception of some bruises, and a sprained ancle, which confines the sufferer to his couch, no worse results were anticipated.

THE CHITTAGONG HILLS.—The Dacca paper says:—"In December last a raid was committed at Galanga in the Sangoo Sub-Division. The Howlongs, an off-shoot of the Cooki race, are supposed to have been the raiders. Ruttonpooia, a Kooki chief, friendly to the British Government, has, I believe, sent information to the authorities of the Hill Tracts of Chittagong that about 700 Loshais have moved towards the north. The Government is anxious to ascertain the identity of the raiders, and has in right earnest undertaken to strengthen the frontier posts. For this purpose, seventy Punjabees under a European officer have been sent. They are at present posted at Chandraghona, a place at the Ghat of the Hills."

THE RAJPOOTANA STATE RAILWAY.—While economy and retrenchment is the universal cry, and Government continually remark upon the necessity of a frugal expenditure, it is worth while to observe whether they act in conformity to what they so earnestly inculcate. Unfortunately an example occurs within our immediate vicinity, proving the inconsistency of their practice with their precept. An able staff has been appointed for the Rajpootana Railway works, the office has, we believe, been formed, and if any credit can be given to the information we have received, all the preliminaries were gone through in order to commence work months ago, yet nothing is being done. Meanwhile the salaries of those engaged for the work are running on, and must eventually add considerably to the cost of the railway. Of course when the average of construction is calculated, it will be found to exceed the original estimate, and the much maligned Department of Public Works will have to bear the odium, though in this case it will be perfectly innocent of blame. We would like to know what deterring influence retards the work."—Delhi Gazette.

Court of Inquiry.—We (Athenæum) noticed in a recent issue that a Court of Inquiry into the internal economy of H.M.'s 60th Rifles had been ordered to take place. The Court has met and concluded its proceedings, but what is the result thereof has not yet transpired.

Post Office.—Mr. C. K. Dove, officiating Deputy Director-General of the Post Office of India, will retire on pension on the 25th instant. For his valuable and praiseworthy services for upwards of thirty years the Director-General of the Post Office of India has recommended the Government to grant him a pension of more than five thousand rupees a-year, a maximum limit allowed to all uncovenanted servants under the rules in force. It is said that the Financial Department has proposed for him a pension equal to six thousand rupees per annum, which will probably be sanctioned.

The Durand Memorial.—Indian Public Opinion says :—"A meeting of residents in Lahore was held this morning in the Anarkulli Reading Rooms, to consider a resolution of the general committee of the 'Durand Memorial,' passed at a meeting held in Government House, Calcutta, on the 9th of January last. The resolution, coupled with a suggestion from the Calcutta Committee, amounts to this, that such funds as may be subscribed should, subject to a further expression of the wishes of the subscribers, be devoted to the benefit in part of the Lawrence Asylums, and in part of Educational Scholarships in the different provinces of India, thus identifying the name of the great Indian statesman, whose loss is so generally felt, with the progress of matters in which he took an interest in his lifetime. The meeting was only of a preliminary character, and the general result will be the circulation of proposals for the basis of a provincial committee. The Rev. E. Davis was appointed secretary."

Judicial Officers.—The Bengal Times says :—"Comprehended within the Regulation Provinces there are 78 sub-divisions, and in the Non-Regulation 22, including the four sub-districts in the Sonthal Pergunnahs. The following is the proportion of native officials employed in the subordinate judicial and executive services at the beginning of the current official year, as compared with the officers of European extraction, including a few who are native Christians :—Hindoo Small Cause Court Judges 10, Mahommedans 3, Europeans, Eurasians, and Native Christians 9, Subordinate Judges, Hindoos 15, Mahommedans 5, Europeans, &c., 5 ; Moonsiffs, Hindoos, 141, Mahomedans 43, Europeans, &c., 2 ; Subordinate Executive Officers, Hindoos 114, Mahomedans 31, Europeans, &c., 57 ; Extra Assistant Commissioners, Hindoos 7, Europeans, &c., 21, and no Mahomedans. The total of employed is—Hindoos 287, Mahomedans 82, and European, Eurasian, and Native Christian, 94."

Murderous Attack on a Colonel by a Native Fanatic.—There is a native in custody at Moorshedabad for having, on the 15th inst., attempted to cut down Colonel Thornhill, the Resident, and Dr. White. These gentlemen and some other parties were riding along the Cassim Bazaar-road, when Dr. White turning round became aware that a man was running after them with a drawn sword. Dr. White called to the Resident and party to get out of the way, but the Resident would not believe that the man intended harm until he had approached almost within cutting distance, when his murderous intention became too manifest to admit of any doubt. This delay had well nigh enabled the swordsman to compass his intention, but luckily Colonel Thornhill quickened his horse, and escaped injury. The would-be murderer followed until himself knocked up by exertion, shortly after which he was secured and eventually made over to the police. The man appears to be in the employ of a Baboo's widow, and his story is that he was driven out of his mind by excessive anger caused by the high price of food. He expressed no penitence or even regret, but lamented his ill luck in not meeting the party on foot, in which case he would have been able to cut them down ! The man, judged by appearances, presents no symptoms of insanity. There is, however, reason to believe that he did not know any of the party he attempted to murder personally, and that his object was to kill a European, no matter who he might be.—Calcutta Examiner, Feb. 21.

Earthquake.—Three sharp shocks of earthquake were felt at Calcutta in rapid succession at about twenty minutes past five o'clock on Thursday morning, the 16th February. The oscillations appeared to be from east to west, or perhaps from E. N. E. to W. N. W., and were strong enough, says the Englishman, to awaken a sound sleeper. The shock was also felt at Barrackpore, Goalundo, Silchar, and Gowhatty. The Indian Daily News vouches for the genuineness of the following letter, which the writer headed "Earthquack :"—To the Editor of the Indian Daily News.—Sir,—Just at five A.M., this morning, before I got out of my bed suddenly it was felt that my breast and whole body began to tremble at first shock at which I was awakened and considered myself any sickness would have effected over me which made me such restless. I was sleeping at second storied-room which began to shake, but upon doubt that noise comes out like melting machine was mouse or rat jumping from this corner to the other immediately after such noise, a second shock was felt with such violence that door was shut—began to push as I was alarmed to call out my servant for assistance if anybody come to rob me, then asked, who are you ? no answer was received then, it was emagined that it was a merely earthquack, which brought in my memorandum to read from many newspapers that at different countries by earthquack the several High and small buildings are thrawn down which striked my heart so much that I instantly came out of my bed-room to a open terrace, that I may save myself from falling under the building, then at first one blowed his shank, then many other noise was heard, then an inward-shaking was perceived more than an hour to be lasted.—Yours, &c., J—— H——, of Sulkea. Calcutta, 16th February, 1871.

Robbery of a Mail-cart near Agra.—The Delhi Gazette reports that the mail-cart which left the Agra Post-office at 7.30 P.M. on Saturday evening was attacked by a party of dacoits near the twenty-first mile-stone from Agra, between nine and ten o'clock P.M. The spot is about three miles beyond Achneyra, on the Bhurtpore-road. The dacoits stretched a rope across the road and stopped the horses. A passenger who was on the cart with the coachman got his leg broken above the ankle by a blow from a lathee, and also received a cut on his head. The coachman had his head almost fractured by blows from a similar weapon. They were brought into Agra, the former on a charpoy carried by coolies, the latter on the mail-cart ; they are both in hospital. A spare coachman and syce, who were on the back seat, being afraid to encounter the ruffians, jumped off, and ran away towards a police-station, where they reported what had happened. The robbers then took the cart about a hundred yards off the road, clearing it of the letters and banghy mails. These they carried away about three miles off the road towards the Bhurtpore boundary, where they sorted the contents of the bags, taking all the valuables, leaving letters, pamphlets, and a few banghy parcels ; these, we hear, were picked up by the Superintendent of Police, Agra, who was in camp on the night previous on the spot where the attack occurred. This officer is, we believe, engaged in endeavouring to trace the gang ; but as the men appear to belong to the Bhurtpore territory, which seems to be evident from the circumstances of their foot-prints having been traced to a village on our frontier close on the Bhurtpore boundary, about four miles from the spot where the attack was made, but no further, it is feared that the search will be fruitless. Probably they belonged to the village, or passed through it to elude being tracked. We hear that the portions of the mails which were recovered were brought to the Agra Post-office, where they have been sorted and sent to their destinations.

Military Amenities in Former Days.—Soldiers very soon come to understand the character of their chiefs. On one occasion Sir Colin rode up to the regiment I was then in, and commenced blackguarding us all, officers and men, for some fault real or imaginary, which we had committed—at all events in his eyes. In the midst of a volley of abuse he paused for breath, when a stalwart Highlander in the ranks exclaimed aloud, but quite coolly, to his comrade, "Eh, Jock ! the auld man's madder than ever to-day ! " The abuse was stopped, and Sir Colin rode off laughing. But I have known of the great Campbell showing want of politeness to no less a personage than his own adjutant-general, and even that high functionary submitted, and according to the A. N. X. thereby disgraced the livery he wore. Sir Colin had given an order which the adjutant-general had forgotten to have inserted in the divisional order books. The old man was furious at the omission, and was complaining in the roundest of terms to the adjutant-general of his neglect, when the latter, with a view to pacify him, commenced, "But my dear Sir Colin "—"Your what ? " roared the afterwards Baron of Clyde. "Who the devil made me your dear Sir Colin ? " This was decidedly not polite, but the Adjutant-General, credat, A.N.X. ! actually submitted to it. The colonel of one of the Highland regiments however once " put down " Sir Colin in a more polite and effective manner than that in which A. N. X. " shut up " his chief. Sir Colin, in his anxiety to make the Highland Brigade the " Crack " Brigade in the Crimea, was perpetually bullying commanding officers of regiments and interfering in matters of detail which it was their province, not his, to look after. One day the old gentleman walked on to a regimental parade-ground without having given any notice, and commenced going down the ranks of the companies and finding fault with everything. "Where's the Colonel ?" he called out—"not here, of course ; in his tent asleep, I warrant." Colonel A—— was a very lazy man and very apt to leave the parade sometimes to the major. But on this occasion he was on parade and close behind Sir Colin, who, not seeing him, at last yelled out, " Who the devil commands this regiment ?" Colonel A., who was a broad Scotchman, and as cool as his climate, quietly but audibly enough rejoined, " Weel, that's difficult to say, Sir Colin —sometimes you and sometimes me." Sir Colin walked away without remark, and there was no general court-martial.—Englishman Correspondent.

IMPORTS.—CALCUTTA, Feb. 22.—The past week, like the preceding one, has been marked by extreme quietness, and the only alteration we have to notice is a slight decline which has taken place in rates. This has been in a measure brought about by the greater inclination exhibited by holders to realise, but even with these lower rates dealers see no inducement to come forward, as they have no present requirements for goods, and there is an absence of speculation in the market. Grey Shirtings: A few transactions in light weights have transpired during the past few days, but business in the heavier makes, say 7 lbs. and 8¼ lbs., is extremely limited. The wide widths are quite neglected, and prices are nominal. Grey Jaconets: Low makes of 38-inch continue in fair demand as last mail's quotations. Mednapollams are in very small request. T-Cloths are very depressed. Mulls: A fair quantity of these have changed hands during the week, without change in rates. The Twist Market generally is very quiet.

EXPORTS.—CALCUTTA, Feb. 22.—Saltpetre: Since the date of our last, we have heard of no transactions for shipments. Only 50 tons of crude Saltpetre have been bought by the refiners. The stock is about 15,000 bags. Rice: Table kind is in good demand, and a fair amount of transactions have been done for shipments at our last quotations. We have heard of very little in Moonghy and Ballam kinds. Linseed is in good demand, both for shipment to Great Britain and America; but, owing to the scarcity of supplies, we have heard of no transaction. Rapeseed: During the week a fair amount of business has been done in new seeds for local consumption. Poppyseed: Since we last wrote we have heard of no transaction to report in this head. Teelseed: Same as before. Jute: During the week we heard of very few transactions to report in this head, owing to the advanced rates of freight. Raw Silk: Since the date of our last about 60 maunds of Cossimbazar Silk have changed hands. Silk Piece Goods: Same as before.

Madras.

RAILWAYS.—It is said that the north-west line of the Madras Railway would be opened to the public as far as Bellary on the 1st March.

CHIEF-JUSTICE SCOTLAND.—Sir Colley Scotland has returned to Madras, and resumed his seat as Chief-Justice of the High Court, much benefited in health by his trip to Calcutta.

MILITARY.—It is stated that his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief has suggested to Government that the 3rd Battalion 60th Rifles, now stationed at Bellary, should be armed with short Snider rifles.

CIVIL.—Colonel C. C. McCallum, Deputy Judge Advocate, Ceded and Northern Districts, is about to proceed to Bangalore, to take charge of the Mysore Division, in the room of Colonel Sherard. Colonel McMaster, now at Kamptee, will take Colonel McCallum's place at Bellary.

COAL AT JUGGIAPETTAH.—The Madras Government at any rate believes in the chance of finding coal at Juggiapettah, for it has sanctioned the retention of the Company of Sappers and Miners doing duty with Lieutenant-Colonel Applegarth, for a fortnight, in consequence of the discovery of coal not far from Juggiapettah.

BANGALORE.—Great preparations are being made at Bangalore for laying the foundation-stone of the new Cantonment Orphanage, for which funds have been raised through the exertions of the Rev. Dr. Murphy. Colonel Meade, the Chief Commissioner, is to preside at the Bangalore ceremony.

MEMORIAL TO SIR W. DENISON.—A scheme is afloat in Madras for commemorating, in some suitable public manner, the services of the late Sir William Denison, ex-Governor of Madras. The proposal has met with a warm response in a variety of quarters, and it is confidently hoped that some substantial memento of our late Governor, one of the best Madras has ever had, may be erected to his memory.

NAVAL.—H.M.S. Forte, Captain Fairfax, and carrying the flag of Rear-Admiral J. H. Cockburn, arrived in the Madras roads on the 14th Feb. from Calcutta; she was to be anchored there for some days. Rear-Admiral Cockburn has, we are informed by a Madras contemporary, paid the Hon. Mr. Seward the compliment of offering to convey him from Bombay to the Persian Gulf in his flagship when his tour in India is completed.

THE 19TH MADRAS N.I.—The Madras Mail asks, "What is the matter with the 19th Regiment of Native Infantry? The regiment has just arrived from Kurnool, and is now waiting to embark for Singapore. Yesterday there was an ominous rumour about that the men had been asking for three months' pay before embarking, and had in other ways manifested symptoms of dissatisfaction. If there is any bad feeling in the regiment, it will be as well perhaps to let a little day-light in upon it. If the regiment has a grievance, real or imaginary, let us by all means hear what it is."

SUICIDE.—An orderly, Private McCormack, of the Female Hospital of the 21st Fusiliers, committed suicide by blowing out his brains on Thursday morning. An inquest was held on his remains, and the verdict returned was temporary insanity. The hot weather is now coming on, and we may expect to hear of more than one such case throughout the country, unless strong restrictions are placed on the sale of liquors to soldiers in the bazaars, and greater interest is taken in the welfare and amusement of the men in barracks.—Bangalore Herald, Feb. 18.

DEATH OF THE FRENCH CONSUL.—Mr. Edward Lecot, Consul o France at Madras, died suddenly on the afternoon of the 16th February at his residence, Nungumbaukum. He was a much respected citizen. We hear that Mr. Martine, junior partner in the firm of Messrs. Lecot and Co., under directions from the French Consul-General at Calcutta, will temporarily take charge of the vice consulship in Madras, rendered vacant by the death of the late Mr. Lecot, until directions have been received from the authorities in France, by whom it is thought Mr. Martine will be confirmed in the appointment.—Athenæum.

ACCIDENT TO LORD NAPIER.—On Friday evening, the 17th Feb. as his Excellency the Governor of Madras was leaving the gate of the Roman Catholic Cathedral, Armenian-street, after attending the funeral of the late Mr. Lecot, his carriage sustained a somewhat serious accident. The horses of several of the surrounding carriages had got excited, and just as Lord Napier was about to drive off, the pole of Mr. Henslowe's carriage made its way right through the Governor's carriage. Lord Napier was struck on the head either by the intrusive pole or by some part of his own carriage, and was rather stunned for the time; but we are happy to hear from the Madras Times that his lordship was well enough to entertain a large circle of guests the same evening at dinner, from which we may infer that he has sustained no injury.

THE HYDRABAD RAILWAY.—The Deccan Herald says:—"The ceremony of the turning of the first sod of the Hydrabad Railway has been, in consequence of some difficulties in the way, postponed. Sir Salar Jung has gone out into the Hydrabad districts for the present, and will not return until the end of this month. It will be at the Hydrabad end of the proposed line that the ceremony will take place, and not at Goolburga, as we previously heard. We hear of disagreements between the Madras Railway authorities and our own G.I.P. Railway Company, and there are rumours of diversity of opinion between the G.I.P. and those connected with the Hydrabad Railway. We hope that nothing will occur to hinder progress and co-operation in these great undertakings—so important to the people of India; but that all will waive their own peculiar views in consideration of the common good to be secured by the speedy execution of these public works."

BURMAH NEWS.—The latest diaries from the Political Agent a Mandalay contain but few matters of interest. The King was principally anxious about the completion of the telegraph line and increased facilities of communication with Europe. That part of the telegraph line which has been finished is working very satisfactorily. A more important subject, however, to British interests was introduced to his Majesty's notice, and afterwards to that of the principal Ministers, in the subject of the prevalence of dacoities on the Thyetmyo frontier by gangs of Burmese, and the raids made from Eastern Karennee upon the timber traders in British territory on the frontiers of Siam. The Ministers promised to give their earliest attention to these matters, and the King gave orders that a telegram should be at once sent to the frontier authorities to put a stop to the robberies, and that written instructions would be sent immediately on the subject. Th

Keng Wondouk, who has been invested with supreme authority in all the frontier districts, is considered one of the most able and energetic officers in his Majesty's service.

Robbery of a Mail by Soldiers.—The Western Star reports that on the morning of the 25th January at 3 A.M., three soldiers of the 89th Regiment, stationed at the West Hill Barracks here, committed highway robbery and mischief on the Cannanore Road, and were brought for preliminary examination before Mr. W. P. Austin, now the Acting Head Assistant Collector of Palghaut. The first charge was for extorting money from Mr. Sharpe's butler, whom they met at the time, and for striking him, which was apparent from a cut across his eye-brows. The second charge was interrupting the mail runner, and breaking open some parcels, which fortunately contained nothing of importance. By the picket-Sergeant Osborne's deposition it was elicited that these men were the only three who had left the barracks before 10 P.M. on the 24th, and did not return till 2 A.M. the next day, during which time he had called the roll three times. This statement was corroborated by the sentry. The mail runner and a few other witnesses were also examined. We are not aware how far the depositions of the witnesses for the prosecution were correct. The soldiers totally deny the charge, and persist in stating that they had not been out on the night in question. They were, however, committed for trial at the High Court, Madras, and it is likely they will be acquitted, as the plaintiffs cannot swear to their identity.

ROMANTIC DOUBLE SUICIDE AT BOMBAY.

We have this week to report a very romantic case of double suicide that occurred on Saturday, the leading actor therein being Rao Bahadoor Moroba Canoba, the old man who more than a year ago so amused Bombay by the publication of a singular advertisement, offering to marry any young Hindoo widow who applied to him and had certain qualifications. Whether in reply to the advertisement or not, Mr. Moroba did get a widow in marriage, but while thereby proving his sincerity in the cause of widow marriage, he roused the animosity of his castemen, caused the excommunication of himself and wife, and, we presume, so led to his own death. His young wife accompanied him to a well, and there, tied together and locked in each other's arms, they seem to have leaped from all their earthly troubles. The circumstances of this romantic affair seem to be these. Friday having been a Hindoo fast day (Shivratri holiday), it appears that Mr. Moroba and his wife dined later than usual, about seven or eight o'clock, and retired to their bedroom about nine. Mr. Moroba's young son, a boy of about nine or ten years of age, named Hurrybhao, who occupied a cot in the same bedroom with his father and stepmother, retired to bed about the same time. This boy did not awake till morning, when, seeing that Mr. and Mrs. Moroba were not in the room, he concluded that they had gone out for a morning walk, as they frequently did. Why or when the deceased came to their fatal resolution is at present unknown. The deliberate nature of the act is shown by the fact that the unhappy couple did not leave their room hurriedly in their night dresses, but dressed themselves nicely, and even adorned themselves with their gold ornaments. The youthful lady's toilet requisites were found lying on a mat in her bedroom on Saturday morning as if they had been recently used. It is also worthy of remark that they did not drown themselves in the well nearest to their bedroom, which was only a few steps from the door of that apartment, but appear to have gone out by the back door of the bungalow, and walked through the garden to a well near the gateway, at least a hundred yards from the house. Close to this well there is a hut in which two malees (gardeners) and a hamal (porter) live with their wives. So close is the hut to the well that had any of the occupants been awake they must of necessity have heard the splash of the bodies falling in the water. But such people, as we all know, sleep deeply, and are not easily awakened, and it was not till about seven o'clock in the morning that the bodies were discovered to be in the well. The malees turned out about six o'clock, and one of them on coming out of the hut saw a pugree lying on the parapet wall of the well. The malee, though he thought this a strange place to see a pugree, presumed that Mr. Moroba had been out for a walk and had left his pugree lying there, and it was not till he had told some of the other people about his having seen the pugree that a suspicion seems to have arisen that anything was wrong. Drags were then brought and the bodies of the deceased pulled up. When brought to the surface the bodies of Mr. Moroba and his wife were still tightly clasping each other, the face of Mr. Moroba resting on the neck of his wife. A woollen comforter, which Mr. Moroba was in the habit of wearing, kept the necks of the bodies closely together, having apparently been tied by Mr. Moroba, as the knot was at the back of his wife's neck.

Mr. Moroba Canoba rose in the course of many years in Government service from a very small office till he became a Judge of the Small Causes Court in Bombay. The best years of his life were spent in the Mofussil, where as Sheristadar, Moonsiff, Sudder Ameen, Principal Sudder Ameen, &c., he gave great satisfaction to his superiors, and for his good services he was rewarded with the title of "Rao Bahadoor." About two years ago Mr. Moroba retired from the Bench with a pension, and since then has been acting as a pleader in the Small Cause and police courts, and on the appellate side of the High Court. He has always been well known as a man of independent and straightforward character, though of late years he had become exceedingly eccentric, and at times displayed a somewhat violent temper. Mr. Moroba's name is well known here, and at home, too perhaps, as that of a prominent Hindoo reformer; and especially did he wish to promote the amelioration of the condition of Hindoo widows. It is now eight years since he first called a meeting of the Patharee Purvoe caste, to which he belonged, for the discussion of the widow remarriage question, and since then he has lost no opportunity of promoting his views on that subject. Unlike many of the Hindoo reformers he was sincere and willing to act up to his principles, and to bear the odium and the abuse which was the necessary consequence. His sincerity he showed by himself marrying a young widow in March last year, for which he along with the lady he had married were excommunicated by their caste people. The residents of Bombay will all remember the amusement which was created by the appearance of Mr. Moroba's advertisement in the newspapers inviting candidates for his hand and heart. This was no doubt a very eccentric method of inaugurating marriage with widows, and furnished the orthodox party with an additional handle with which to heap obloquy upon the reformers. So great was the ill-will existing amongst the orthodox towards Mr. Moroba Canoba and his wife that even Mr. Moroba's eldest son, Mr. Kunderow Morojee, solicitor, and daughters would not visit at his house; and, as Dr. Hewlett remarked at the inquest, the general public knew Mrs. Moroba better than even Mr. Khunderao did, for he had never seen her but once, whilst almost every person in Bombay must have occasionally seen Mr. and Mrs. Moroba driving out together. Mr. Moroba, himself, however, visited his son and daughters.

It is difficult to understand what motive can have led to such a deliberate sucide. The only motive which can at present be guessed was pecuniary difficulties and Mr. Moroba's disagreements with his son, Mr. Khunderao, who had filed a suit against him in the High Court. At the inquest Mr. Khunderao was plainly unwilling to say much about the feeling which existed between him and his father; and we may add displayed but little regret at what to him especially ought to have been a most melancholy and lamentable occurrence. Mr. Moroba had recently vacated the large bungalow which he had for some time occupied, and which is now rented by the Freemasons. On leaving the large bungalow he occupied a small bungalow in the same compound, and intended on the 1st of March to remove to a still smaller one. Whether he was induced to make these changes and to let these two bungalows on account of pressure on his purse we cannot say, but certain it is that he was in much distress about the suit brought against him by his son. He had filed a cross action in the High Court, and called upon his son last week to try whether they could not come to an amicable arrangement, but found this impracticable.

Mr. Moroba was about sixty years of age, while his wife, Bhoolee-baee, was only about twenty-one or twenty-two. There were no marks of violence on either of the bodies, and though some Hindoos had a suspicion of foul play by castemen, the medical evidence contradicted that. The bodies were burned on Saturday evening.—Bombay Gazette, Feb. 25.

Miscellaneous.

Road Steamers.—A road steamer has been received by the Bombay Municipality from Edinburgh, the powers of which have been tried by setting it to pull a number of night-soil carts, and it answers admirably.

Mr. Crawford.—A letter of the Duke of Argyll, with reference to the Bombay Municipal Commissioner's Report for 1869, conveys an expression of his Grace's "approbation to Mr. Crawford, the Municipal Commissioner, and Dr. Hewlett, the health officer, on account of the zeal and ability with which they perform the important duties entrusted to them."

The Back Bay Company.—The Secretary of State, we hear, has approved of the proceedings of the Indian Government relative to the settlement of the debt of the Back Bay Reclamation Company to the State, on the understanding that the Bombay "special fund," to which the amount has been directed to be debited, will be credited the sums, with any profits realised from the land conveyed by the company.—Indian Daily News, Feb. 21.

The Convict Whitwell.—The Bombay Gazette says that Whitwell, one of the Europeans sentenced to imprisonment for life in connection with the cotton frauds at Bombay, is now reported to be seriously ill in the House of Correction, and Government has again been recommended to take the state of his health into consideration, and to transfer him at once to England. It is said that the convict is suffering from liver complaint.

A Deputy Magistrate Sentenced.—The Poona Observer reports that "Rao Bahadur Wenayekrao Deewakur, Full Power Deputy Collector and Magistrate of Khandeish, having been convicted before Mr. Ashburner, the Zillah Magistrate, of having taken bribes, has been sentenced by that officer to be rigorously imprisoned for a period of one year, and to pay a fine of Rs. 2,000. There are two other charges against the Rao Bahadur, on which, however, it being most probably without the Magistrate's jurisdiction to punish him, he stands committed to take his trial before the Session Judge.

Imports.—Bombay, Feb. 25.—The business done this week has again been very small, and prices generally are lower. First holders have been offering their goods freely, and a good many packages, the property of bankrupt firms, have been placed on the market. But Grey Jacconets, 40-inch 2½ lbs. and 2¾ lbs., all descriptions of Grey Mulls, and 6, 7, and 8 lbs., 45-inch Grey Shirtings, are scarce, and in fair demand; but the distrust among the bazaar dealers, with respect to up-country buyers—among whom more failures have been announced—prevails, and to some extent impedes business.

Exports.—Bombay, Feb. 25.—Cotton: By the telegrams received during the week, the Liverpool Cotton Market has, in consequence of large receipts, been dull and heavy; and the price of Fair Dholleras, notwithstanding the announcement that peace between France and Germany was considered certain, has continued throughout at 6¼d. Prices here may generally be quoted Rs. 3 to 5 per candy lower, but a considerable business has been done. The purchases made in Bombay for export aggregate about 7,300 candies, among which there were—of New Cotton, 2,600 candies of Oomrawuttee, at Rs. 190 to 185 per candy; 1,300 candies of Machine-ginned Broach, at Rs. 205 to 200; 650 candies of Akote, at Rs. 197 to 194; 450 candies of Barsee, at Rs. 190 to 191½; and 300 candies of Khandeish, at Rs. 175 to 165; and of Old Cotton, 650 candies of Dhollera and Bhownuggur, at prices ranging from Rs. 165 to 190, according to quality; 500 candies of Dharwar Sawginned, at Rs. 190 to 191; and 250 candies of Oomrawuttee, at Rs. 167 to 168. The market closes quiet.

Political No. 2.

India-office, London, Jan. 5.

To H.E. the Right Hon. the Governor-General of India in Council.

My Lord,—I have received with the deepest regret the telegraphic intelligence of the melancholy death by an accident of Major gen. Sir H. M. Durand, K.C.S.I., C.B., lieut. gov. of the Punjab.

2. By this calamity the Govt. of India at home and abroad has been deprived of the services of one of its best officers whilst in the performance of his public duties at a time when he had just entered on a new career of utility, for which he was eminently fitted.

3. Having entered the Indian army in one of the scientific branches of the service, he distinguished himself at an early period by his gallantry in the field, and subsequently by his ability and independence of character in different high civil and political appointments, and as a member of the Supreme Government won for himself the confidence of successive Governors General, until he was selected by your Excellency to fill the high office in which his distinguished career has been so suddenly brought to a close.

4. The life of such a man is an example to the service, and H.M.'s Govt. deeply deplores his death.—I have, &c., Argyll.

A HINDOO TEMPLE IN LONDON.—What will the frequenters of Exeter-hall say to the erection of a Hindoo temple in the midst of Christian London? We give them fair warning that such a thing is threatened. There was a meeting of influential natives held in the state of Joonaghur (in Kattywar), a few days ago, at which it was resolved to raise a subscription for the purpose of encouraging and assisting young Hindoos who desire to go to England for the purpose of finishing their education; and a respectable vernacular paper in Bombay assures us that a temple of Hurkeshwur Mahadew is to be erected in London out of the fund, about a lac of rupees being set apart for that purpose.—Bombay Gazette, Feb. 25.

THE INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AND THE PRODUCTIONS OF BOMBAY.—A number of ladies and gentlemen attended by invitation at the Town Hall, on the 20th of February, to see the articles to be sent from the Bombay Presidency to the Exhibition of 1871. The productions of the Presidency are well known to all who have been in the country for any length of time, and those which have been selected are exceedingly good specimens. The deep carving of the Surat boxes and albums is excellent; the ivory figures, too, are very good, while the embroidery and brocades are above the average usually met with. The photographs, which are principally by Messrs. Lindley and Warren, and Messrs. Sykes and Dwyer (now the Bombay Photographic Company), represented many of the best views to be obtained on this part of India. Altogether, Bombay will be well represented, though, as we heard it remarked, it would have been just as easy to have temporarily transferred selected specimens from the Indian Museum to the Exhibition, for by so doing much trouble and expense would have been saved. It may be mentioned that some goods which are to be sent to England have not yet arrived from the provinces, while much has already been forwarded. The Supreme Government have sanctioned Rs. 20,000 towards the defrayment of expenses, so that it is to be expected that Bombay will be fairly represented.—Times of India, Feb. 25.

THE FALL OF MUSCAT.—The following report from Major A. C. Way, H.M.'s acting Political Agent and Consul at Muscat, is dated on board H.M.S. Kwang-Tung, Muscat Harbour, February 3. "On the 18th H.M.'s gunboat Hugh Rose proceeded to Muttrah to prevent the transport of reinforcements and military operations by sea. On the 23rd Syud Azan defied the orders of her Majecty's Government, and sent a field piece and ammunition by sea. As the boatmen would not return when warned, the boat was run into and sunk by H.M.S. Kwang-Tung. No one was hurt. The portion of the force of his Highness Syud Toorkee under Syf bin Sulliman reached Ruce on the 24th, and occupied the surrounding country. On the 18th Syud Azan attacked it near Fulluj; and was repulsed with loss. The following day quantities of poisoned halwa (sweetmeat) were sent out from Muttrah. This halwa was, as expected, pounced upon by the enemy. Many partook of it, but fortunately so sparingly that the effect was not fatal. On the morning of the 30th the town of Mattoah was attacked and taken. Syud Azan and Syf bin Sulliman were killed. Ebrahim bin Ghes fled to Muscat. During the day all the forts but one surrendered. The next day Ebrahim bin Ghes fled from Muscat; Khuleilee and his son took possession of the Jilalee and Marahi forts; and the troops, with the exception of those with Khuleilee and his son, dispersed, leaving the approaches and gates of Muscat open. On the 1st the attacking force took possession of the town of Muscat. The accounts differ as to where Syud Toorkee is. Some are that he will arrive immediately; others that he is still near Summud. The conduct of the attacking party has been excellent; no plundering has been allowed. her Britannic Majesty's Political Resident arrived here by mail of the 2nd."

EAST INDIA ASSOCIATION.—THE FINANCES OF INDIA.

The adjourned discussion on Sir Charles Trevelyan's address on "The Finances of India," delivered at the Rooms of the Society of Arts in July last, was resumed on the 7th inst., Sir CHARLES TREVELYAN occupying the chair, and re-opening the debate. Having said a few words which recalled attention to the main principles of the question at issue which bore generally on a plan of reorganising the Public Works system of India, the speaker was followed by Sir CHARLES WINGFIELD, M.P., who professed to agree with nearly every proposition contained in the comprehensive and statesmanlike address which had been delivered. Sir Charles Wingfield considered, with the author of this important paper, that the taxation of India should be indirect and not direct, the better to advantage the country in the material sense of the development of its resources. The continued imposition of the Income-tax, which the chairman would reduce in amount, he (Sir Charles Wingfield) condemned altogether. The speaker proceeded to examine the statements and views of the paper with regard to the revenues of India, and the administrative means by which they were collected. He advised that the Supreme Government should limit its administrative powers so as to admit the local Governments to more share in the administration of their own financial affairs. As regarded the system proposed of employing capital largely to assist the local Governments in carrying on their Public Works, he would be inclined to watch jealously the introduction of such loan system as Sir Bartle Frere had recommended; neither could he concur with the proposal to take over the Public Works, and submit this important department to the operations of commercial financing at home. He would not curtail the authority of the Supreme Government in this respect, although he did not deny that the Public Works Department was mismanaged; but if mismanaged by the Supreme Government, it was also mismanaged by the local Governments. It was inconceivable that the Imperial Government could be brought to countenance and support the financial control recommended to be exercised over the revenues and public works of India. The plans propounded for the decentralisation of the Indian finance system he thought equivalent to the decimation of the Governmental Public Works Departments. India had already been bringing more capital into the country for railways, irrigation works, and canals than she could afford to borrow. Of this the speaker gave several instances, and concluded by urging the discouragement of factitious public companies and their operations. Whenever it could be shown that public works could be carried out on a large scale under proper organisation, and with safety and profit, he would be glad to recognise such an improvement; but if the profits of improved cultivation of the land were shown to be real, he considered that any surplus arising from the profits of particular districts should be allowed to remain in the hands of the local rulers of those districts, to be used in following up the development of material resources in the manner which seemed best to those acquainted with the localities, He, in conclusion, apologised for criticising so freely the propositions contained in the paper, believing that those views were founded on the deep convictions of the chairman, whose wide knowledge and experience of India were well known.

Mr. P. B. SMOLLETT criticised Sir Bartle Frere's paper on Indian Finance, and dealing with what he termed the present impecuniosity of the Government, he attributed it to the shameful mismanagement of the Public Works and the corrupt encouragement of extensive jobberies. But he, nevertheless, objected to the proposition for relieving the Supreme Government from the responsibility of the public expenditure; and transferring it to the hands of some commercial or finance committee sitting in some hole of an office in a back street in London. The address of Sir Charles Trevelyan was much more temperate in recommending administrative reforms and the developement of the resources of India. The latter was untainted with considerations connected with "vulgar jobbery" such as had notoriously been carried on with the land of India by public companies under various pretences of improving the irrigation, the canal and railway communication of the country. He next denounced as most disgraceful the way in which the Public Works Department had squandered the public money by millions sterling upon useless barracks, five stories high, and so constructed that they could not be inhabited when built. Those barracks he considered were evidences of the practice of jobbery which the Government had allowed the contractors to carry on in association with delinquent officials. Advising retrenchment in the expenditure of India as the best panacea, Mr. Smollett recalled the name of Lord William Bentinck as the Governor-General who was the inaugurator of retrenchment, and as the consequence, left a flourishing treasury to his successor. Any Governor-General who would follow up the principles of Lord William Bentinck's rule might cut down the expenditure now by at least four millions. He (Mr. Smollett) had no faith in the Parliamentary committee appointed to sit on Indian Finance, because he did not think that, whatever their propositions, they would be allowed to be carried out. He expressed himself pleased with Sir Charles Trevelyan's plan of dealing with the irrigation works in India. It showed thrift, and at the same time would be the means of advancing the works. Indeed thrift appeared to be the aim of Sir Charles in dealing with public works generally in India, while, however, Sir Richard Temple was now pursuing a course of extravagance and impolicy which he could not too strongly object to. If Sir Charles Trevelyan had been as sensible a reformer when he was in India as he now showed himself to be, the country would have reaped great benefit from his recommendations; but he must be allowed to complain of the reticence Sir Charles had shown, when he resided in India, a high administrative official. However, the fault was condoned by the able exposition of the state of affairs in India the right hon. gentleman had laid before the Society.

Mr. Maitland (East India merchant) expressed his dissatisfaction with the wholesale denunciations of the Supreme Government of India in which Mr. Smollett had indulged. Although he (Mr. Maitland) was not officially connected with the Government, he felt it must be undeserved. He advocated greater encouragement of native intelligence in working out the commercial system of India. He was glad to find that agricultural plans he had long been an advocate of had become embodied in the formation of a new agricultural department connected with the Indian Government. After making a few more practical observations connected with the commerce of the country, the speaker concluded.

Mr. Tayler took up the question of the ryots, and argued against the fallacy that the peasant proprietors in India were in a prosperous condition. From his own personal experience he knew that the contrary was the fact; at any rate, it was so in that part of India with which he was acquainted. In conclusion, the speaker said he could much wish to see the Parliamentary Committee entrusted with powers to examine witnesses on the ryot question, and on those of the Irrigation and Canal Works of India.

Colonel Rathborne thought that the panacea for the evils India suffered from lay in a liberal scheme of land tenure.

The Right Hon. the Chairman wound up the discussion in a succinct reply, in which he stated that the new Parliamentary Committee on Indian Finance would doubtless derive much information to guide them from the deliberations of the East India Association. Referring to the revenues of India, Sir Charles said the revenues were in a good state, but the expenditure was in a bad state, and his own views on the point, he observed, were joined in by Mr. Smollett and other speakers. The Parliamentary Committee would chiefly have to deal with this subject. The Committee would also have to consider the important question whether it would answer to throw the resources of India into the hands of capitalists in the English money market under a grand financing or loan system. In launching India on a career of moral and material improvement he believed the Imperial Government might with safety look forward to amply profitable returns. After a few more observations on the principle of the decentralisation of the Public Works Department, the right hon. gentleman concluded his reply with a few complimentary remarks on the ability and knowledge of Indian finance and revenue displayed in the pamphlet of a highly intelligent native gentleman they had with them in the Association—he alluded to the hon. secretary, Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji.

Miscellaneous.

Professor M'Gill.—Dr. M'Gill, Professor of Hebrew and Oriental languages at the University of St. Andrew, and a member of the Bible Revision Committee, died on the night of Friday last.

Indian Finance Committee.—The East Indian Finance Select Committee met on Thursday, for the first time, to consider and arrange the course of proceedings of the committee. Mr. Ayrton was chosen chairman.

Sind, Punjab, and Delhi Railway.—The vacant seat at the Board of the Sind, Punjab, and Delhi Railway, caused by the death of the late Sir Herbert Maddock, has been accepted by Sir Donald F. M'Leod, C.B., K.C.S.I., late Lieut.-Governor of the Punjab, who has at the same time been elected deputy-chairman of the company.

Death of Mr. Farquharson, of Langton.—Mr. James John Farquharson, of Langton House, Dorset, died on March 10th, in his eighty-seventh year. He was the son of Mr. Farquharson, an East India merchant, who purchased the manor of Littleton and the adjoining estates in 1798. The deceased gentleman was famous as a sportsman, having hunted Dorsetshire and a part of Somersetshire for fifty-two years, without requiring any assistance from his friends further than the preservation of foxes. Mr. Farquharson was a practical agriculturist as well as a field sportsman.

Bankruptcy.—There was an examination sitting last Wednesday at the Court of Bankruptcy in the matter of Edward Bigg, East Indian merchant, of Mount-street, Manchester, having an establishment at Bombay. The debts are not less than £102,126, against some of which of there is security to the value of £60,000. On the application of Mr. N. Chatteris, the trustee, an adjournment for three months was ordered, to give opportunity for accounts being received from Bombay, where the principal assets are.

Bills on India.—Tenders for £400,000 in bills on India were received on Wednesday, the 15th inst., at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—to Calcutta, £298,000, to Bombay, £100,000 and Madras, £2,000. The minimum price was fixed as before, at 1s. 10$\frac{1}{2}$d. on all the Presidencies. Tenders on Calcutta and Madras at 1s. 10$\frac{1}{2}$d. will receive about 12 per cent. and on Bombay at 1s. 10$\frac{5}{8}$d. about 97 per cent. Those above, in full.

A Just Award.—The Secretary of State for India has granted the sum of two thousand pounds each to the 7th and 19th Regiments of Hussars as compensation for the depreciation of property and inconvenience which those corps have suffered from being ordered home at such short notice. This award must fall very far short of the loss actually sustained, yet the concession is acceptable as admitting a principle, and we are happy to add that the example is to be followed in the case of the five batteries of Horse Artillery, which have been summoned from India likewise on short notice.

Troops for England.—The Indian troopship Euphrates, Captain C. T. Curme, will leave Bombay on the 10th of April with about 470 troops for England, via the Suez Canal. This mode of making the passage will be a great boon to the numerous invalids who, we hear, are coming home by this opportunity. The Serapis broke her screw shaft 350 miles to eastward of Malta on her way to Alexandria. The Crocodile met her on her way back from Alexandria and towed her into Malta. The Serapis will transfer her living freight to the Crocodile, which vessel will take it on to Alexandria, the Serapis receiving the Crocodile's lot. The shaft will be repaired in eight or nine days. The Crocodile will bring home all her original troops, &c., and the Serapis come home empty.

The Superseded Colonels.—The report of the Royal Commission on the Supersession of British Colonels by those of the Indian Army has been sent in to the Secretary of State for War. It is understood that Lord Cairns is of opinion that the proposal of Colonel Anson's Committee of last year cannot be legally carried out, as the Warrant of 1862 was clearly a breach of the guarantee of 1858, and therefore that the Warrant of 1864, repealing that of 1862, must be maintained. The Commission, while adopting this view of the legal bearings of the case, are understood to have intimated in the report their strong opinion that measures should be taken by the British Government to give such advancement to the British Colonels as would remove the hardship under which it is admitted on all hands they are suffering in the matter of supersession.—Broad Arrow.

Indian Civil Service Candidates.—A candidate for the Indian Civil Service publishes the following letter:—"Sir,—Allow me, through your columns, to draw attention to the grievance under which we candidates for this examination are at present labouring. It has been officially announced that the examination will this year commence on the 28th inst. Such of us as have been preparing at the universities, or elsewhere out of London, are therefore now leaving our present abodes and coming up to town. But, although the time is close at hand, the Civil Service Commissioners have made no announcement as to the particular days of examination allotted to each subject, nor indeed as to the number of vacancies. No man knows whether he will have to stay in London for one week only, or for three. The inconvenience and expense entailed by this uncertainty, both as to the present residence and prospective arrangements, are obvious. Since the number of intending candidates, and the subject in which each wishes to be examined, have been known to the Commissioners since the 1st of February, we might fairly have expected some information before now. This year also we have been compelled to pay £5 for the privilege of being examined in this open (!) competition. More than two hundred and fifty men have complied with this somewhat severe regulation, many of whom would not have dreamt of going up had they known what we are liable to hear any day now—that the number of vacancies had been reduced to twenty-five."

Army Labour.—The Committee appointed by the Commander-in-Chief find, from the returns which have been obtained from the majority of the regiments in Great Britain, that the number of bona fide artificers available for employment at trades is very limited, being an average of 17 16-35 per battalion. Few of these have been found, on being tested by the Royal Engineer Department, to be first-class workmen. The Committee recommend that the following be the regulations for securing the employment of soldiers in trades:—The pioneers of a regiment to cease to be employed on fatigue duties, or in the Quartermaster's stores. They are to consist of one sergeant, a carpenter by trade if possible; three carpenters, two bricklayers, one able to plaster and one able to slate; one smith, able to shoe horses; one mason, able to cut stone; one painter and glazier; two plumbers and gasfitters—per battalion. The non-commissioned officer who may be selected to take charge of the pioneers should, besides being a tradesman, be able to write a legible hand and to keep simple accounts. The work required to be done for the public service is to have priority, but when circumstances admit, work may be done for the regiment, and even private work for officers or others, if approved of by the commanding officer. The apportionment of money earned by contract, and the payment of the tradesmen generally, must be carried out by the pioneer sergeant, under the general superintendence of an officer to be appointed by the commanding officer of the battalion. A fund to meet the cost of repairing or replacing tools, or other contingent expenses, will be kept by the regimental paymaster; and, in order to establish this fund, a contribution, not exceeding five per cent., to be fixed by the commanding officer, should be deducted from payments made for all work performed. This fund should not at any time exceed £30. The arrangements made should be entirely with a view to the system being self-supporting, not taking into account the ordinary regimental pay or allowance received by the non-commissioned officers and men as soldiers.

SERVICES OF SIR W. MANSFIELD.—He obtained his first commission in the 53rd Regiment, November 27, 1835; became lieutenant, Aug. 31, 1838; captain, February 10, 1843; major, December 3, 1847; lieutenant-colonel, May 9, 1851; colonel, November 28, 1854; major-general, May 18, 1858; and lieutenant-general, December 27, 1864. He served with the 53rd Regiment in the Sutlej campaign in 1846, and was present at Buddiwal, Aliwal, and Sobraon, at the last-named action acting as aide-de-camp to the Commander-in-Chief. He commanded the 53rd in the Punjab campaign in 1849, and was present at the battle of Goojerat. He was also constantly employed in the operations on the Peshawur frontier in 1851-52, either in command of the 53rd or attached to the staff of Sir Colin Campbell commanding the forces, and was present at the affairs of Nawadund, Pranghur, and Skarkote, where his horse was wounded. In June, 1855, he was attached to the Embassy at Constantinople, with the rank of Brigadier General, as responsible adviser of her Majesty's Ambassador, and in August proceeded to the Crimea in his Excellency's suite; going to Warsaw at the close of the war as Consul-General, with the same rank in Poland. Upon the outbreak of the Indian Mutiny he was nominated chief of the Staff in that country, with the rank of Major General, and served throughout the war of 1857-59 in that capacity, including the relief of Lucknow, battle of Cawnpore—wounded—advance on Futtehghur and action on the Kalee-Nuddee, the siege of Lucknow, campaign in Rohilcund, battle of Bareilly, and affairs at Shahjehanpore; campaign in Oude in 1858-59, actions of Doondea Khaira and the Trans-Gogra campaign, including the various affairs resulting in the complete subjugation of the province of Oude. Sir William has the medal with clasp for the Sutlej campaign, medal with clasp for Goojerat in 1849, medal with clasp for service on the Peshawur frontier in 1851-52, and medal with clasp for the Indian Mutiny campaign. He was thanked by Parliament for the services he rendered in India in 1857-59, was appointed a K.C.B. in recognition of his exertions at the relief of Lucknow, and made a major-general after the siege. He was Commander-in-Chief from 1860 to 1865, when he succeeded Lord Strathnairn as Commander-in-Chief of Bengal. Last year he again succeeded Lord Straithnairn in the Irish command.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, TUESDAY, March 14.—INDIA-OFFCE MUSEUM.—Mr. GRANT DUFF, in answer to Colonel SYKES, said that the Zoological collections in this museum were, to a certain extent, accessible to scientific students, although he was bound to admit there were many difficulties yet to be disposed of. Even if additional land should be taken, and a more suitable building erected, he was afraid that the available space would be entirely occupied by showing those products of India which it was desirable to bring under the notice of the commercial community; so that science, pure and simple, would be very badly off. The next sheet of the Indian Atlas would be published to-morrow.—Colonel SYKES: Is it not true that that the Zoological collections are boxed up?—Mr. GRANT DUFF: Yes, they are. (A laugh.)

HOUSE OF COMMONS, THURSDAY, March 16.—THE ARMY REGULATION BILL.—The adjourned debate on the Army Regulation Bill was resumed by Lord BURY, who joined with previous speakers in regretting the narrow scope given to the debate by the amendment, and would have preferred to say "yes" or "no" to the second reading. He considered the Bill was entirely inadequate; it did not carry out the promise of Mr. Cardwell's speech, and omitted altogether many most important points of army organisation. The abolition of purchase, said to be the pith of the Bill, had no real connection with the other objects Mr. Cardwell had proposed to himself—such as short service, increase of the Militia, and reorganisation of the Volunteers. No doubt it would be necessary to abolish purchase before officers could be exchanged backwards and forwards between the Line and Militia; but was this advantage worth eight millions, besides the unknown cost of retirement? He complained, moreover, that for the sake of abolishing purchase, such points as Artillery Reserves, Militia Organisation, Commissariat, &c., had been entirely passed over. If purchase were abolished the regimental system must go, and he strongly objected to any deterioration in the class of officers—any large introduction of the "average vestryman" class. As to selection, he could not see how it could be worked out without creating ill-will and discord, and he quoted against it Sir J. Burgoyne's opinion and his own knowledge of the system in the Austrian army, where the selected officer had to begin by fighting half-a-dozen duels with those over whose heads he had been passed.—Mr. OSBORNE acquitted the Government of the charge that they were actuated by party motives in basing their Bill solely on the abolition of purchase, and attributed it to Colonel Loyd Lindsay's "nibbling amendment" that the House, after four nights' debate, was "still floundering in the morass of the purchase system." But he complained that the measure did not come up to Mr. Cardwell's own programme, and it would land the country, he predicted, in large expenditure, ill-defined estimates, with no prospect of permanent security. No information was vouchsafed as to what was to take the place of purchase, nor as to the army of the future. Admitting, however, that purchase was doomed, Mr. Osborne urged that the abolition should be carried out at once, and in a just and liberal manner, and expatiated on the cost of retirement and the difficulties of selection, which, in Sir John Burgoyne's words, he believed would degenerate into a lottery or an abuse. He ridiculed, too, the suggestion of giving away all first commissions by competitive examination, exposed the shortcomings of the Government scheme in regard to organisation, commissariat, artillery reserves, &c., and concluding by declaring that he could not support the amendment, but he should oppose the second reading.—Mr. CARDWELL, after touching on the narrow issue raised by Colonel Loyd Lindsay's amendment, repeated his assertion that no real reform could be attempted until purchase was abolished, and therefore the expenditure was not wanton, but wise and judicious. Replying to Sir J. Pakington, he described once again the principle features of the reductions he had effected in the last two years, maintaining that he had not thereby reduced our effective military strength, while the increase this year was due entirely to exceptional and temporary causes. Defending the Bill from various criticisms, he asserted that not one of the requisites mentioned by Lord Elcho and others in the course of the debate had been overlooked, but none appeared in the Bill save those for which legislation was necessary. Organisation, for instance, was not a matter which could be put into a Bill; it was to be carried out by Royal warrants and acts of the Executive. But it dealt with one of the most important points—short service; and he gave the House the particulars of a calculation showing that in twelve years the short-service system would give us a first Reserve of 178,000 men, and would have poured into the civil population some 400,000 men under fifty years of age, neither receiving pay nor pension. The organisation of forces so varied as ours, and enlisted on the voluntary principle, must be slow, but at every step the anomalies of purchase interrupted the progress and stages of organisation. Next he examined, with numerous quotations from the evidence and the reports of Royal Commissions, the baneful effects of the present system on purchase and non-purchase officers, on non-commissioned officers, and on candidates for the army, and showed how indispensable its abolition was to improve the professional training of the officers and to make the army an open career. He explained and defended the operation of the principle of selection, denying that it would break up the regimental system, and, with regard to retirement, he remarked that he should have gladly laid a scheme before the House had he possessed the information. But whatever expense it might be necessary to go into now, it would ultimately prove a great economy. And finally, he argued in favour of paying over-regulation as well as regulation prices—quoting in this sense the opinions of Lord Palmerston and Sir H. Hardinge,—and asserted that the future efficiency of the service under the altered circumstances of warfare demanded that purchase should be at once swept away.—Colonel NORTH moved the adjournment of the debate, to which Mr. GLADSTONE objected, on the ground that the commencement of the financial year was at hand, and it was necessary immediately to take some votes in supply.—The motion, however, was supported by Mr. BENTINCK, who characterised Mr. Gladstone's attempt to stifle debate as a proceeding worthy of M. Bismarck; and by Mr. ANDERSON, who, speaking from the Ministerial side, complained of the manner in which Mr. Speaker's choice of speakers was regulated, which gave independent members no chance.—Mr. DISRAELI also desired an adjournment, wishing to address the House on the subject. On a division the motion for an adjournment was defeated by 284 to 187. A second motion to the same effect was made by Mr. R. FOWLER, and defeated by 256 to 147; and a third motion following, Mr. RUSSELL GURNEY suggested that there should be a morning sitting to-morrow.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, FRIDAY, March 17.—INDIAN RAILWAYS.—Mr. GRANT DUFF, in answer to Mr. RIDLEY, said that he had no means of furnishing a detailed statement of the sums already expended by the Government of India upon the projected line of railway between Lahore and Peshawur. The question of gauge was left with the Secretary of State and the Governor-General to determine.

COOPER'S HILL COLLEGE.—Mr. GRANT DUFF, in answer to Mr. PLUNKETT, said that it was intended to alter, in conformity with the resolution of the House of Commons, the prospectus of the Civil Service Commissioners with reference to this college.

THE ARMY REGULATION BILL.—The fifth night's debate on the Army Regulation Bill was opened by Sir JOHN HAY, who opposed the measure as founded upon an erroneous principle, and suggested that, instead of abolishing purchase, it would be better to devote the money to arming the fortifications at Gibraltar, Malta, and Quebec, furnishing field artillery and supplying guns for the navy.—Mr. ANDERSON criticised severely the proposed treatment of the Volunteers, and opposed the payment of over-regulation prices.—Mr. HERMON, though favourable to the abolition of purchase, declined to support it unaccompanied by a scheme of retirement.—Colonel DYOTT and Major WALKER spoke decidedly against the Bill.—Mr. R. TORRENS requested some further information as to the details of the expense, while Sir W. RUSSELL and Captain GROSVENOR supported the abolition of purchase, but thought the re-organisation scheme utterly insufficient.—Mr. DISRAELI rose at a few minutes to ten and began by remarking that the events of the last seven months, out of which the Bill had sprung, had led the people of this country to expect something more than the abolition of purchase, although this had been a Parliamentary question for a good many years. There was a general feeling that the security of the Empire was not complete, and by this test he proceeded to try Mr. Cardwell's scheme, and how far it came up to his programme—a sufficient army, ample reserves, and the placing of all our military resources under one supreme control; and he maintained that the result of the comparison was very disappointing, particularly in the matters of reserves. But although the fulfilment of the programme was not so vigorous as might have been anticipated, remembering his pledge at the commencement of the Session he was anxious that the Bill should be read a second time, and that the details, such as Purchase, should be dealt with in their proper place. He was disposed to see in the Bill something of the fashionable doctrine of evolution, and to hope that the features faintly adumbrated in the Bill might be developed into substantial legislation. Passing to the subject of Purchase, Mr. Disraeli classed it among such questions as marriage with a deceased wife's sister—affairs which go on pretty much as usual, whatever might be the decision. But in the Bill the question assumed a financial aspect, and, therefore, it required more careful attention. Examining the Government Estimates closely, Mr. Disraeli warned the country to be prepared for a much larger cost than eight millions, and if Mr. Lowe a few weeks hence should have to ask for a new tax to pay off purchase, the state of things would become intolerable.—Mr. GLADSTONE, after intimating that the Government would not acquiesce in the withdrawal of the amendment, but would insist on its being negatived, welcomed Mr. Disraeli's speech as an important landmark in history, particularly in its recognition that this was the first attempt to weld together in one organisation all our varying forces. In answer to the criticism that the Bill did not come up to the programme of the Government, he pointed out that it only contained so much of the programme as needed legislation. Taking as the standard of our requirements a small army, highly trained, and a large army of Reserve ready for service at any moment, Mr. Gladstone went on to show that this would be the product of the Bill. He differed, however, from Mr. Disraeli in thinking that we should draw our Reserves from the Militia. On the contrary, we ought to have Reserves of seasoned men, regularly trained, corresponding to the German Landwehr. He next dealt with the suggested necessity of an increase of pay when purchase was abolished, which he professed himself utterly unable to understand, and, in an elaborate argument explained his reasons for disbelieving that the officers of the army would come hereafter from a very different class of society, and for advocating this change as the first step towards drawing together a highly trained army. Finally, he stated that the Government would go into Committee inviting criticism and co-operation, and without any pedantic assumption that they had been able of themselves to make their proposal perfect.—The amendment was then negatived, though Colonel LOYD LINDSAY offered to withdraw , and the Bill was read a second time.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, March 4; Agra and Madras, March 2; Calcutta, March 1.

FRESH inroads of Loshais are reported from the Cachar frontier. On the 23rd February they were beaten back from Jalnacherra by the police who guarded that place. Other attacks were expected in other directions; but a hundred of the 44th N.I. had left Silchar on the 25th for Jalnacherra, and part of the 4th N.I. were on their way to Monierkhall. Two companies of the 43rd N.I. have started from Shillong for Sylhet, their place being taken by troops from Gowhatty. Lord Napier himself was at Silchar on the 24th February. News of Mr. Edgar's party had been received up to a recent date. They were expected at Monierkhall by the 27th February. By the end of the previous month they had completed another march of six days through Loshai territory, meeting with most friendly treatment all along the way. It has at length been resolved to cut good roads through the jungle from one frontier post to another. The wisdom of this move is self-evident. Another measure which the Government are said to be revolving is the extension of British sway over the very haunts of these Loshais. Even the sternest foe to annexation will hardly object to this mode of dealing with the savages who disturb the peace of our Eastern frontier.

IT appears that the planters of Cachar place very little trust in Sukpilal's honesty and professions of friendship towards the English. Jalnacherra, the last garden attacked, is said to be only a few miles from that chief's headquarters. It is asserted that the six Loshai bodies found at Monierkhall were those of men belonging, not to a distant, but to a neighbouring tribe. About two thousand troops and police now occupy the disturbed district. The time however for moving forward seems already to have passed by, for we hear that the rains have fairly set in, and while they last it is simply impossible to march a body of troops through the dense jungle, with its tangled growth of underwood.

THE ceremony of investing the Maharajah of Patialah with a Grand Commandership of the Star of India came off on the 27th February. Prince Gholam Mohammed and Sir W. Grey were at the same time made Knights-Commanders of the Order. Everything seems to have gone off as it should. The Grand Master, Lord Mayo, looked "imposing;" Jeypore, Vizianagram, and Gholam Mohammed sparkled with jewels; but Patialah's turban eclipsed everything near it for size and brilliancy. Lady Mayo is described as looking queenly, and Mr. Aitchison, the Foreign Secretary, and a Companion of the Order, read the usual warrant "in his firm decisive way." Perhaps the most suggestive incident in the whole scene was the presence of Prince Gholam Mohammed, the son of England's greatest foe, beside the Chief of Patialah, son of her most staunch and serviceable friend in need. The former, be it remembered, is the last of the twelve sons whom Tippoo Sultan left behind him when his life and dynasty ended together in 1799. Ever since the Mutiny of Vellore Tippoo's family have lived and died in Calcutta, and now, seventy-one years after the fall of Seringapatam, the last of the House, a feeble old man not far from fourscore, has received the Star of an Indian Knighthood from the representative of a power which Tippoo and his father tried their best to drive out of Southern India. The old Prince is said to have been specially famed for his charities, for "his active and remarkably broad benevolence."

BY the end of this month the railway communication between Madras and Bombay will want no further link than the great bridge over the Kistna—a work that will probably take two or three years to finish. On the Madras side the line to Raichore junction is already open, the first train from Madras having entered the Raichore station on the 25th February. There were still seven miles to finish on the Bombay side, but it was expected that this gap also would disappear before the 1st April.

SIR W. GREY will not have left India without some farewell tokens of esteem from various sources. Not the least flattering of these was the address delivered to him on the 27th February by a large gathering of members of the Bengal Chamber of Commerce. The address thanked Sir William for the interest he had always taken in the commerce of Bengal, for his courtesy and goodwill towards his commercial countrymen, and for all he had done towards improving the port of Calcutta, and it ended with a hope that his Honour would allow his portrait to be taken and placed in the Hall of the Chamber. In the course of his answer to the address, Sir William dwelt with pleasure on the fact of his having served as Secretary to the Bank of Bengal for three of the twenty-five years he had spent in Calcutta, assured his hearers of the interest he took in the Port Improvement Trust, and declared that he for one had found "the large European element and the extensive European interests" comprised within Bengal to be by no means "the most difficult feature in the government" of that province.

IN his recent lecture on the best means of improving the education of native women Baboo Keshub Chunder Sen called for a further development of the Normal School System, for an efficient inspectress of public girls' schools and zenanas, the establishment of adult classes, secular teachers for the zenanas, visits by Hindoo ladies to interesting places, and distribution of prizes. Dr. Milman, the Bishop of Calcutta, thought very little improvement could be expected from mere secular education.

Dr. Chevers, on the contrary, not being a bishop, expected "much improvement from the effects of education and enlightenment among the women of India."

A curious illustration of Mr. Darwin's theory of sexual selection is furnished in Mr. Edgar's Report on the races that inhabit Cachar. Among the Naga or Kwaphee tribes of the Cachar hills, the men, we are told, select their wives not with reference to their personal beauty, but according to their skill in dancing. The maiden who displays the most strength and agility in the village dancee commands the best price in the marriage-market of her tribe. Not until he has proved her excellence in this important respect does the young wife-hunter ask the terms on which he may have her for his wife. If he can then give the requisite number of cows, pigs, or fowls, or the quantity of liquor demanded by the girl's family, he may take her home with him after having duly feasted the people of his own village. As a test of feminine fitness for the duties of married life, a London season does not appear to differ very widely from the usages of a Naga village in the wilds of Cachar. Some people will perhaps be inclined to regard the more civilised ordeal as the harder of the two.

It appears that Jhansi has at length been given up as a station for European troops. The 106th Foot are under orders to leave the place, and the detachment of artillery at first ordered thither from Jullundar have since been sent to Nowgong in Bundelkund. It would be well if some other stations in Central India were also stripped of European troops. Rajpootana could easily dispense with a British garrison at Nusseerabad for instance, which has nothing to recommend it except its ill-built barracks, its perfect isolation from every other garrison, and the general dreariness of its surroundings. Ajmere could always get troops at need from Agra or Gwalior, and Rajpootana could be held by native troops just as effectively now as it used to be before 1857. The loyalty of its Princes in that year of trial bore witness to the sufficiency of the old arrangements, and there is no reason to believe them less loyal now than then. Would it not by the way be the wisest policy to make each native State answerable for the maintenance of proper garrisons within its own borders; each being bound to supply a certain contingent towards the general defence of the Indian Empire, but left free to manage in peace time its own military affairs, if so it chooses, under certain clear conditions?

We should be greatly obliged to any person who could give us a satisfactory reason for the peculiar method of our financial dealings with India. "All progressing countries," said Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji, at a recent meeting of the Society of Arts, "are building their public works by loans, and come to this country for borrowing, while poor India, with all her material and moral drawbacks, and struggling for her very existence, is tortured by all sorts of vexatious local and Imperial cesses and taxes." What is the sufficient excuse for so strange a departure in India's case from ordinary common-sense rule? Why is it that her "ordinary" public works, most of which would anywhere else be defrayed by terminable loans, are always charged against the yearly revenue? One would imagine that expensive new barracks, for instance, were works whose value would be felt by more than one or even two generations, and yet India is taxed afresh to pay the cost of building them year by year. Again, there is a vast field open for profitable investment in the way of "extraordinary" public works, such as canals, railways, harbours, and so forth. A thorough system of irrigation and drainage would make India absolutely safe from recurrent famines and floods; but to carry it out would cost many millions, and for some inscrutable reason it is forbidden to enter the money market for more than two or three millions at a time. Turkey or Egypt may carry off any amount of good English money, but the wants of our great Eastern Empire are only to be satisfied by niggardly instalments, that barely suffice to keep her from actual starving. The result of all this mistaken economy is work often badly done, money wasted in piecemeal jobs, and a growing pressure on the Indian taxpayer. What possible objection can there be to raising large loans in this country for India's benefit, which means in effect our own? The more English money is invested in Indian funds, the keener will be England's interest in Indian affairs and the firmer her resolution to retain her Indian Empire. On the other hand, it is useless to ask the people of India to lend out money at four or five per cent. when their customary rate of interest is nine or ten.

Mr. Eastwick has given notice of an intended motion in the House of Commons for the resuscitation of a local European army in India. We can hardly venture to hope that he will succeed in undoing the process of amalgamation ordained after the Mutiny by the Home Government in defiance of the views maintained by the foremost of Anglo-Indians of the day. But a renewed discussion of the question then decided with more of haste than sound forecast will not come amiss at a moment when the whole of our military system is about to undergo a radical change. The difficulty of combining a short term of home service with a longer term of foreign service in one same army would naturally raise the question whether the two services should not henceforth be kept distinct. Arguments founded on the so-called White Mutiny of 1859, a movement far more discreditable to the Government that provoked it than to the mere recruits by whom it was really set on foot, will have to be reconsidered by the light of later experience and a calmer review of preceding history. Some better reason than the turbulence of a few hundred young soldiers, enraged at the notion of being "handed over like cattle" from one master to another, must be found for opposing a recurrence to that separate system which gave the East India Company an European force unsurpassed for good and loyal service by any army in the world. A local army, let us say, of fifty thousand men enlisted for eight or ten years' Indian service, supplemented by a few thousand marines, would serve every good purpose far better than the same number of Royal troops going to and fro every six years, especially if old soldiers were ensured the choice of fair pensions after twelve or fourteen years' service, or of good staff appointments at any time in various branches of the public service in India.

In the interests of the Indian army it would be well also if somebody would call attention to the present mode of officering the native troops. In spite of Lord Sandhurst's entire satisfaction with the "irregular" system, as it works now, we can nowhere find any traces of readiness to share that pleasant delusion of his among those who are likely to have the best practical acquaintance with the system in question. From all we can make out it seems to combine the worst faults of the old regular system with a mere outside mockery of the old irregular pattern. It was the vital principle of the latter that both the few English and the many native officers were picked men; whereas in its present counterfeit the native officers are mostly of the old regular Sepoy type, old men promoted from the ranks, while the half-a-dozen English officers, if in a certain sense selected from the Staff Corps or the Locals, have not the old inducements to make their regiments their home. We should be glad enough to think otherwise, but the concurrent evidence for this view of the matter seems far to outweigh the isolated assertions of Sir W. Mansfield.

Paragraph 4, Clause 1, of the new Army Regulation Bill seems to revive the question of Bonus Compensation under a new aspect. It promises to consider the claims of officers of the new line regiments to compensation for losses caused by the abolition of purchase, subject to the conditions laid down in Lord Cranborne's Despatch on Bonus compensation. In other words, the boon held out to the rest of the Queen's Army in respect of over-regulation prices will in these particular regiments be liable to the deductions devised by Lord Cranborne for the benefit of their comrades in the old Indian Army. Their regimental bonus funds are to be ignored as extensively as those of the old Indian officers have hitherto been ignored. With such an arrangement the officers in question cannot of course remain content. A stir is already making among the non-purchase regiments already at home, and their right to equal justice with the purchase regiments is about to be advocated in Parliament by means of an amendment securing them the market value of their retiring bonuses. Should their claim be successfully upheld, the inference drawn therefrom will hardly escape the notice of those Indian officers who are still asking for the justice they have hitherto besought in vain. May we venture to hope that the India Office will take the hint betimes?

THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE IN INDIAN EDUCATION.

No abler advocate of an English education for the people of India could readily be named than the author of a well-reasoned article on the subject in the last number of the Cornhill Magazine. Mr. W. Thornton knows what he is writing about, and even those who object most strongly to his conclusions will give him credit for the dialectic and literary skill wherewith he has enforced them. The question on which he has discoursed so cleverly is certainly one to which there are two sides, but so convincingly does he put the case for his own side, that people who have no foregone conclusions to defend will not find it easy to refute him.

Mr. Thornton's thesis may be thus briefly stated. If the £700,000 a-year, most of which is now spent on teaching the ...tives in their own vernacular, were applied to the teaching of English, the result would be vastly better for ourselves and for them. What is the good, he begins by arguing, of teaching any one to "construe a language in which there are no books" —none, that is, to speak of, beyond a very few classics of the Bagh-o-Bahar type, while all the rest are translations made by foreigners? Look at the history of the old Roman conquests. It was only among nations that had a literature of their own that Latin failed to supersede the vernacular tongues. In Britain it became at once the language of public business; in Gaul and Spain it became the father of modern French and Spanish; and it is still the virtual language of modern Roumania. In the same manner the Mogul conquerors of Upper India substituted Urdu for the vernacular Hindi. The Indian Government however "has always gone upon a directly opposite tack," forcing its English servants to learn the native languages, and sedulously discouraging the study of English in the many schools it has spread over the country. Especially since 1854 has it acted on the principle of making the vernaculars the one medium of popular education in preference to English. The growing desire for an English education was deprecated again and again as "a very serious evil," against the spread of which the local authorities were continually bidden to keep strict watch. These latter repeatedly in their reports take credit for discouraging what they admit to be a wide-spread demand for English teaching. Everywhere the people asked for English teachers, while the people's shepherds carefully confined them to their own especial pastures; English in most schools being taught merely as a language instead of being made the vehicle for all other learning. So eager are the boys themselves to learn English that the concession of an English teacher would at once double the attendance in many places. But instead of encouraging so healthy an appetite, the powers that be devise from time to time fresh means of checking it, and glory in the success of their efforts to that end. To Mr. Thornton's instances we may add the yet more recent witness borne by Captain Holroyd in his Report on Education in the Punjab for 1870. At the end of the year 1869-70 the number of students learning English in the Punjab schools was less by nearly two thousand than in the year before. This, we are told, "is partly due to the closing of the English department of several town and village schools, but mainly to the more strict observance of the rule that a boy must pass through the lower department of a zillah school before he is permitted to commence the study of English, and the extension of the same principle to town and village schools where English is taught." Compared with 1865-66, the culminating year of English studies in the Punjab, the difference against 1870 is more than twice as great. In the one year 13,181, in the other only 8,570 scholars were learning English. And yet, according to the same witness "the desire to learn English is certainly quite as strong as it ever has been," and the natives will always pay more for the teaching of it than for schooling of any other kind. The new rules on the other hand which oblige the student to master the vernacular before he begins the study of English, are admitted to be "still highly unpopular" throughout the Punjab proper.

Mr. Thornton draws a parallel between the universal knowledge of Latin among students of all kinds in Mediæval Europe and the case with which modern Indians might be brought to attain a similar knowledge of English. What is to prevent them under due encouragement from rivalling the progress of the Scotch Highlanders, few of whom below a certain rank could speak our language in the early days of Walter Scott? Now, however, it is the very few who can speak their native Gaelic. Every boy in all the primary schools learns English, and there is great difficulty in finding Scotch ministers qualified to preach from Gaelic pulpits. It seems as easy for children to learn one language as another. In order to give the Gentoo mind an English bent, we have only to forbear from placing hindrances in the way of English teaching. In all Government schools, the lowest as well as the highest, "adequate provision should be made" for teaching our own language; the study of any vernacular being left optional or treated as ancillary to that of English. And this could be done without reference to the moot question whether the work of educating the native mind should be carried from below upwards, or downwards from above. A judicious mixture of both processes would perhaps be better than either, and what could serve better to that end than the adoption of a common method for the lowest as well as the highest schools? That the two converging currents would soon meet after they had thus been turned into streams of English knowledge, may be argued from the known fact that in certain parts of Lower Bengal the bulk of the native reading public are not only great readers of English books, but even "prefer that the Hindoo Patriot and other like newspapers, expressly designed to be vehicles and reflectors of native thought, should be composed in English." Under right conditions, the English language might, in two or three generations, "become naturalised all over India in the same degree as it already is in parts of Bengal Proper." In the course of time English might wholly supersede the old vernaculars; an event which, however mournful to the ethnologist, would bring unmixed advantage to India herself. It would, for example, quicken the whole of her technical industry, by opening to every industrial worker the "recorded results of England's technical experience." Her intellect would be stirred and sharpened, her moral sense raised and purified, by acquaintance with "the accumulated fruits of English adventure in every field of science and literature;" for, after all deductions, our standards of thought and feeling are still far above those of our Indian fellow-subjects. The moral influence of our literature would be all the greater for India's own literary poverty. "An intelligent Hindoo, led away from the sapless leaves of his Shasters, and turned loose into the wholesomer pastures of good English reading, could not help, by assimilation of the fresh provender he browsed upon, being partially renewed in the inner man, and getting some of his old moral tissues replaced by others of a sounder and healthier fibre." And the process of Anglicising would do more to Christianise India than "centuries of missionary enterprise." No course of English reading would permit the people of India to retain their present creeds. London newspapers alone would anyhow prevent their remaining Pagans or Mohammedans. The Anglicised native would fraternise more and more with his English neighbours. Englishmen and Indians would mix more and more readily together on a footing of social equality and mutual esteem; and no excuse would remain for shutting out the natives from those fields of public usefulness which are still so largely reserved for their white masters. Why, in short, should we not take a lesson from Alexander the Great, who governed Persia to a very great extent through native agency, placed Persian officers in command of Persian levies, and encouraged, nay, forced, many of his Macedonian captains to marry Persian wives, while he took care to have all public business transacted in the Greek tongue? Foreign and intrusive as it was, the dynasty thus founded survived for three centuries, and only fell at last through a foreign invasion?

Such is the pith of Mr. Thornton's suggestive paper. His arguments are none the less strong, because some of them are evidently founded on Mr. Monteath's Educational Note for 1865-6. It is no small triumph to find your sharpest weapons supplied to your hand from the armoury of avowed antagonists. The most cursory reading of passages quoted in that Note from the reports of local inspectors shows how widespread is the desire of natives for an English education, and how ready they are on the least encouragement to contribute money towards the attainment of their desire. What then is the good of baulking them in respect of an aim so harmless, if not for our sakes most desirable? If the bulk of natives would pay twice as much towards teaching their children English as towards improving them in their own languages, what right have we to thwart their wishes because they have a sort of notion that learning English pays best? The desire to learn our language for whatever purpose surely deserves all fair encouragement at our hands, especially when that desire is confined not to one class or province, but pervades the whole country. To force the study of their own vernaculars on a people thus predisposed seems to us a most retrograde piece of folly, a wanton waste of a splendid opportunity for doing good to others with great advantage to ourselves. The natives ask for bread, for the privilege of learning their masters' speech, and we put them off with the stones of their poor vernaculars, from which no sort of mental nourishment can be extracted. We cannot colonise India with Englishmen, but it lies in our power to make of her in due time an English-speaking colony by the simple process of imparting knowledge to all her children through the medium of our own tongue, and of transacting all kinds of public business in that tongue alone. That the possession of a common language may sometimes serve as a bond of fellowship between different races, was shown by the fact on which we cannot insist too often, that during the Mutiny not one English-speaking native was found on the side of the insurrection. Such a fact proclaims its own moral. Each new school set up with native help for the study of English would thus add one more guarantee for the permanence of British rule in India. In the course of a few generations the teachings of English literature, the fruits of modern thought and science, would thus come to leaven large masses of the native population. And this same process would tend to Christianise the country far more effectually than whole centuries of missionary effort. The substitution of English for Urdu in the Law Courts would merely be displacing one foreign language by another—the linguistic symbol of Mohammedan supremacy by the far more appropriate symbol of British rule. In the face of all these considerations, it is idle to talk of the "evils" arising from the neglect of vernacular studies, and worse than unwise to throw needless difficulties in the way of a movement at once popular and tending to our own advantage.

Correspondence.

THE MAHARAJAH OF PUTTEEALA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

Dear Sir,—The Indian correspondent of the Times has some particulars regarding the present Rajah of Putteeala which are not quite correct, and induce a belief that the writer has but little acquaintance with the affairs of the Punjab. He says that the Rajah is seventeen years of age, and is almost ashamed to tell us he has three wives and a son. The Rajah was born three years before his time—that is, his mother not being a favourite wife of his father, the latter hoped to have other children by better loved wives, and so did not report the birth of the present Rajah to the British Government. Time wore on; no other heir apparent; and, after three years' patient waiting, the Rajah was of necessity compelled to announce the birth of an heir apparent, concealing the fact that the child was then actually three years old. He frequently pleaded this fact during his long minority, but unsuccessfully; and it was only last year, when he was officially said to be twenty-one (though, in reality, twenty-four), that he was permitted to assume the government of his principality. His Highness is, consequently, twenty-five, not seventeen, years of age, and there is, consequently, nothing very remarkable in his having more sikhico, three wives, and one son. There are several other mistakes in the letter of the Times' correspondent to which I allude, but they are not of sufficient importance to be specifically corrected.

THE BANK OF BENGAL.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

Sir,—A letter from "A Shareholder," which appeared in your last issue, again draws attention to what he considers an unsatisfactory report of the Bank's business for the last half-year, and the low rate of dividend, and makes a very unfavourable comparison between recent rates of profit and what the Bank paid for a quarter of a century before the establishment of branches, and attributes the diminished dividends to mismanagement.

On reference to the present report it appears that the money market was "characterised by uninterrupted dulness and inactivity" for the whole period, which is stated, it is presumed, as the cause of the low rate of dividend, and as that cause is not within the control of the management, it might be questioned whether any better result could, under the circumstances, be reasonably expected.

The statement of assets and liabilities shows that the Bank holds funds amounting to upwards of eight crores and a-half of rupees, while the investments are only three and a-half crores, leaving a balance of five crores wholly unemployed; and as this seems a large amount to hold for so long a period in the vain expectation of a demand for money, it would be desirable to know whether there is any insuperable objection to increasing the Bank's investments in Government Securities, because a purchase to the extent of one-half of the unemployed balance, say two and a-half crores, would, from the interest accruing, have nearly doubled the amount of dividend. If the rules of business are too stringent to admit of such operation it may be found advisable to revise and relax them.

That the Bank is in a highly favourable position as to means for profitable working cannot be questioned, as it holds, besides the capital, upwards of six crores, for which it pays nothing; consequently, it seems reasonable enough that "A Shareholder" should entertain some misgivings in regard to management.

As to whether the establishment of so many branches has been of advantage or otherwise to the Bank it is impossible to form an opinion in the absence of special information bearing on the point. The working expenses have of late years been largely increased, and amount now to nearly ten lacs of rupees per annum, or about five per cent. on the capital, but whether there has been anything like a corresponding benefit to the Bank is a question which remains to be solved.

On looking to the past and present positions of the Bank, and comparing results, there seems to be sufficient cause to call for special inquiry into the policy and whole working of the Bank for the last ten years, and there can be no reasonable objection to the shareholders taking combined vigorous and properly directed action with a view to obtain the information which they desire.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant, An Observer.

Notices of Books.

Memoir of George Edward Lynch Cotton, D.D., Bishop of Calcutta, with Selections from his Journals and Correspondence. Edited by Mrs. Cotton. Longmans and Co. 1871.

In an age of unlimited biographising we may well be thankful for the one volume in which Bishop Cotton's widow has set forth the narrative of her husband's blameless career, as told in part by the copious extracts she has given from his journals, letters, and the statements contributed by various friends of the deceased. For Anglo-Indians the main interest of the volume will be found in that large proportion of it which deals with the last eight years of a life so abruptly ended by the false step which flung him without hope of rescue into the treacherous current of the Ganges. Those who knew and loved the sometime under-master of Dr. Arnold's Rugby, who afterwards as head-master of Marlborough raised that school into a second Rugby, may wish perhaps that more than 67 out of 571 pages could have been allotted to the many years during which the future successor to Bishop Wilson was quietly but surely leaving his mark on the minds of our English youth. But after all Dean Stanley, who appears to have compiled the first three chapters, has contrived to bring out in them a clear and appreciative picture of his old friend's ways and doings, from the time when the odd, shy, weakly, playful-witted Westminster boy, who shrank from the rough games of his stronger schoolfellows, would bring a young tyrant to reason by fair argument, or delight his companions with endless stories spun in great measure out of his own head, to the day when Bishop Cotton took his last farewell of Marlborough, before entering on the work to which Lord Lyveden had called him in "the interests of India, of the Church of England, and of Christianity." Enough at any rate is told in these earlier chapters to account for the gentle influence which Tom Brown's "model young master" wielded over the hearts and minds of men like Dean Stanley, the late Professor Conington, Dr. Vaughan, Professor Shairp, the present Lord Derby, and other contemporaries of little less note.

The character which his old friends are made to draw of him in this part of the book receives further illustration from the journals and letters wherein the Bishop Cotton of later years indirectly paints himself. Where these fail her, the editor fills up the gaps in his life-story with contributions from her own not unskilful pen. And we are bound to own that in this her loving labour she has tried her best to avoid doing her husband the injustice of praising him overmuch. There is ample evidence of a desire to judge him fairly, as a friend not blind to a friend's weaknesses, nor prone to overrate his real strength. And in truth, with all her admiration of one so worthy of her highest regards, she could add but little to the chorus of admiring regret which his untimely death evoked from all parts of India. The very parallel she has traced between him and Bishop Heber is one which would naturally suggest itself to any person acquainted, however partially, with the lives of both. Inferior, as she admits, "in brilliant gifts of imagination" to the great predecessor whom he had always specially revered, Dr. Cotton closely resembled Heber in scholarly culture, in the mixture of religious earnestness with intellectual grace and breadth, in "those attributes of urbanity and peculiar gentleness through which the varied classes and races that crossed their path were attracted towards them." And the sorrow caused throughout India by Heber's untimely death could hardly have exceeded that which found fit expression in the Government Order announcing the death almost as untimely of Bishop Cotton. Lord Lawrence used no idle compliment when he declared that "there is scarcely a member of the entire Christian community throughout India who will not feel the premature loss of this prelate as a personal affliction," and that seldom in any country has it been given to any body of Christians "to witness such depth of learning and variety of accomplishment, combined with piety so earnest and energy so untiring." It was this rare commixture of grace and strength which ensured Cotton a far wider range of influence in eight years than the worthy, kind-hearted, but somewhat narrow-minded Wilson attained in twenty-five. The Viceroy's reference to the large numbers of natives who, without sharing in the late Bishop's faith, "had learned to appreciate his great knowledge, his sincerity, and his charity, and will join in lamenting his death," was entirely justified by the "spontaneous outburst of regret" which one who had the best means of judging declared that his sudden removal had "evoked from the educated natives of Bengal." Christians of all shades and sects in India joined with natives in revering the memory of one who by word and deed had proved himself a Christian of the oldest school.

For a full and interesting account of the Bishop's Indian career the reader would do well to consult the Memoir itself. Cotton landed in Calcutta towards the end of 1858, little known either to the public or to private friends. None of the great Church parties claimed him for its own; his shy, somewhat stiff manner was no passport to popularity, and the old question as to the proper relations of the Indian Government with the native religions was mooted none the less fiercely for the plain assurances of the Royal Proclamation. Not many months had passed however before the new Bishop had made his mark and laid the foundations of that wide repute for fair dealing, good sense, and large-hearted energy which remained unshaken to the day of his death. His zeal in the cause of education, his temperate and tender handling of nice questions, social, political, or religious, that came up for his consideration, and the thoroughness with which he loved to go through the humblest of his duties, were accompanied by many proofs of a broad tolerant sympathy and an active interest in all that was going on around him. He was never idle, and his letters and journal show what good use he could make of his eyes and ears on his frequent tours of duty. He was full of hopes and projects for the immediate future when that fatal slip plunged him into a future of a very different kind.

Spirit of the Indian Press.

THE INDIAN STAFF CORPS.

The Delhi Gazette, viewing the Staff Corps system as a military organisation for providing officers to bodies of men enrolled as regiments, asks if any other system could have been devised whereby esprit de corps could possibly have been so completely eradicated? It thinks not. The half dozen officers "attached" to each regiment have nothing permanently in common. The second in command or wing officer, or any subaltern, may be removed in a higher capacity to some other corps, where he would be looked upon as an interloper; his appointment thereto would very naturally be put down, not to superior merit but to interest, and his nomination would be no doubt prejudicial to the supposed claims of one or more officers of his new regiment. These officers become less zealous, and subside into lukewarmness in the performance of duty and in interest for their regiment. They also work their interest with people in high places and expect a transfer sooner or later to some other regiment. It may be said that the leaven of discontent is thus introduced in a greater or less degree throughout the Staff Corps. Now view the regiment on parade, not a battalion but a large brigade parade. Its complement of European officers is seven. Suppose two or three of these to be absent on furlough, there remain then three officers for one wing, and two for the other. Imagine either wing to be detached for the purpose of carrying a position. All the officers being mounted offer a conspicuous mark to the expert shooters or marksmen of the enemy. All are put hors de combat before the wing has arrived within 400 yards of the position to be taken. What is the wing to do, "go on," or "retire?" If the former, it is evident that European officers are not needed for native regiments except as marks for the crack shots of the enemy; if the wing retires, the retrograde movement disarranges the general's tactics at a critical time. Here, then, is a most serious defect in the present system of officering N.I. regiments. Next view the Staff Corps as a whole, in which promotion goes by length of service, that is, after 12, 20 and 26 years, an officer rises to be a Captain, Major, Lieutenant-colonel. What effect has this system of promotion had on the military expenditure of the Indian Army as compared with the expenditure for the same purpose previous to the formation of the Staff Corps? The Bengal Staff Corps about this time last year numbered:—6 Major-generals with Colonel's allowances, 16 Major-generals without allowances, 257 Lieut.-colonels, 350 Captains, 252 Majors, 159 Lieutenants, total officers, 1,040. Taking the rate of Staff Corps for each grade it will be found that these 1,040 officers each cost the State in pay alone an average of Rs. 6,425 per annum. Now take the Bengal Army, European and Native Infantry and Native Cavalry. It numbered before the S. C. was formed :—77 Colonels with Colonel's allowances, 78 Lieutenant-colonels, 78 Majors, 560 Captains, 880 Lieutenants, 440 Ensigns. Native Cavalry : 10 Colonels, 10 Lieutenant-colonels, 10 Majors, 70 Captains, 90 Lieutenants, 40 Cornets ; total officers, 2,303. The average cost to the State in pay only was Rs. 4,409 per annum per officer. The Native Army of Bengal, including every description of battalion or corps, force, or levy, comprises 28 Cavalry and 63 Infantry regiments. Let the Government select from these what may be termed Line regiments, say 16 Cavalry and 50 Infantry regiments ; officer these regiments fully, and let promotion be distinct in each up to the grade of Lieutenant-colonel. Any officer withdrawn from his corps for any staff employment whatsoever to be "seconded," as in the Artillery. Throw open these regiments to the Staff Corps, calling for volunteers therefrom. Embody these officers in the various grades of a regiment according to their substantive rank ; the officers in excess of the number required in each grade to be pensioned off and employed in the Army of Reserve or Volunteers in the United Kingdom.

BALLOONS.

The Madras Times believes that most of its readers are well aware that balloons have played no inconsiderable part in the strange drama of the siege of Paris which has been enacted before the eyes of the world during the last four or five months. How far the Parisians have benefited by them, however, is not quite so clear. The outside world at any rate has been able to judge by means of these aerial messengers how it fared with the people inside the beleaguered city. There is no doubt this war will, amongst other things, have given great impetus to the study of aeronautics, just as the war in America opened up entirely new views on the subject of ironclads and naval construction generally. India, with its many cloudless days and generally speaking steady breezes, would seem to be a country admirably adapted for experiments in aeronautism ; and it strikes us that if such experiments for the use of the army are to be carried out, the Horse Guards would do better to lay the seat of their operations in this country than near Chatham or Shoeburyness. How far would it be advantageous to the sick soldier, for instance, if during convalescence, or when suffering from malarious fever he could, instead of being left in a hospital on the ground, be sent up into the pure ether of the air a few hundred or even a couple of thousand feet ? The idea is novel, perhaps, as regards the sick ; but not at all impracticable. During the summer season of 1869 a balloon, Captive Balloon, as it was called, daily ascended over London, and remained suspended over the town during the day, coming down at nightfall ; it bore no invalids that we are aware of, but we perfectly well remember how an old Scotch woman who had reached her hundredth birth-day, on being asked by the workhouse authorities, of which she was unfortunately an inmate, how she would like to spend her centenary, quaintly answered, up in the balloon. Up in the balloon she was sent accordingly, and by all accounts enjoyed her trip immensely. And how truly Scotch—still determined to rise in the world, even at her great age ! We recommend this notion of balloons seriously to our readers. The more we think of it the more it commends itself to our mind. What a delight, for instance, if in the coming hot season such of us as cannot escape to the blue hills could spend a day occasionally in a temperature of say sixty to sixty-five. Tedious ! not a bit of it. A party of four and a rubber would, with the exquisite feeling of pure cool air, make the thing most enjoyable. Ladies could enjoy their work or a good book. We feel confident that we possess at our hands a ready means, hitherto overlooked, of much enjoyment—and perchance to the sick of much advantage ; and, if the experiment be carried on by Government, a boundless field for observation which might be of the utmost practicable advantage to the army.

PROTECTION OF THE NORTH-EASTERN FRONTIER.

The Englishman expresses a doubt whether it could have ever been proposed to rest permanently satisfied with shutting out the Loshai tribes by a cordon of guards. To be efficient, such a plan would be enormously expensive, and it would leave the root of the evil untouched. It would, in fact, be a palliative rather than a cure ; and its adoption, otherwise than provisionally, would be only justifiable on the ground that a cure was impossible. A much more efficient, a much more humane, and, in the end, we are convinced, a much more economical plan, would be the occupation of the tract of country inhabited by the raiders. A scheme for the occupation of the Syloo and Howlong valleys is, we believe, before the Government ; and Mr. Baker's report leaves very little doubt in our minds that convenient and sufficiently salubrious spots might be found for military posts in the country inhabited by the northern tribes. Four such posts of 250 to 300 men each, with a couple of guns, would practically command these valleys, and their establishment would ultimately be the means of civilising the races inhabiting them. The strong and on the whole reasonable feeling against the further extension of our frontiers can hardly apply to a tract of country which, though its occupation has hitherto been held inconvenient, has long been geographically included within them. Politically, there is no more objection to our bringing the Loshai Hills under our rule than there was to our occupation of the Southal Hills ; and the necessity for such a course is fast becoming as great in the one case as it was in the other. Indeed, to leave nests of dangerous savages in the midst of civilised tracts becomes a blot upon the administration of a great people the moment it ceases to be unavoidable. The Loshais are by no means destitute of high qualities, and lying as they do between North-Eastern India and the tribes of Western Burmah, they are capable of being utilised for an important purpose. They must first, however, be brought thoroughly under our control, and surely the mere drawing of a fence between them and us will not have that result. If there is any truth in the fact that the Burmese wild tribes are surging on towards our frontier, there is very little doubt that the Loshais, left to themselves, must either combine with or succumb to them ; and in either of these cases we should find it absolutely necessary to occupy this hill country as a defensive measure. We cannot do better than take time by the forelock and occupy it now, before it is converted into a stronghold by more formidable enemies.

THE OPIUM REVENUE.

The Bombay Gazette, looking to the threatened loss of a monopoly, observes that the Indian Government, wishing to preserve its revenue, will have to consider how that desirable end can be secured. The question, as it seems to us, is a mercantile one. The Government is a merchant. As long as it held a virtual monopoly of the market its prices and export duties might be maintained at any rates consistent with the demand—that is, not prohibitory ; but when a powerful native competitor enters the field, then the problem is complicated, and in addition to the effective demand for Indian opium, the influence of the homegrown supplies on that demand has to be estimated. Nor can it be easy to form a judgment. There is tobacco. We are not aware that the consumption of Manila and Havannah tobacco is diminished because other countries furnish immense quantites of very good tobacco. And the reason is that Cuba and the Manila islands have a kind of monopoly of quality and flavour. In the same way it is doubtful whether opium, equal in all respects to Indian opium, can be grown and manufactured anywhere out of India. And this is obviously a very important element in considering what the effective demand is likely to be, and how much people will pay for its supply. The advantage in point of quality is a constant quantity which, on our supposition, cannot be taken away, however numerous the competitors may be. The demand may be reduced by a change in taste or by poverty ; but, as a rule, the best products of every kind can always obtain a market, provided the price be not too high. It has to be ascertained whether the effect of a large cultivation of the poppy in China will be to extend the area of consumption by including the poor, or whether the area will remain nearly the same, and whether the introduction of a cheaper article will drive out a proportionate quantity of the Indian supply. We are inclined to think that the home drug will mainly enlarge the area, and that the number of those who prefer the best will remain the same. But that is precisely what the Government of India will have to ascertain by careful and constant inquiry. If the home-grown drug really competes with the Indian drug and lessens the consumption, it will soon appear in the shape of diminished revenue. But the Government should get in advance of such a misfortune, should ascertain whether it is likely to happen, and, if it appear a probable contingency, should take measures to anticipate the competitor by subjecting him to competition. Now, in Bengal, so far as the mere raising of the revenue is concerned, the higgling of the market will determine the price per chest, and the Government cannot make it more or less. The only way in which the Government can reduce the price is by producing more at less cost. In Bombay, however, the Government can directly affect the price by reducing the export duty. It has long been a question whether this duty is not too high for the market, and, in the teeth of competition in China, Government will have to determine whether, for the sake of the trade and the revenue, the rates should be upheld or reduced. If the competition in the long run does not affect the sales of Malwa in the Chinese market at remunerative rates, then of course it would be a sacrifice of revenue to reduce the duty ; but if it is found that the Chinese supply drives a portion of ours out of the market, and is likely to make further successful inroads, the assailant ought to be met by a decisive reduction of the export duty, so that the advantage in the market may revert to our product. Hence, we say, it is a nice mercantile question that has to be decided, one demanding great knowledge and greater judgment ; and on the solution of this question will depend the prosperity or decadence of the opium revenue.

The Delhi and Rewarree State Railway.—The Pioneer says that it has been decided to proceed at once with the continuation of the Delhi and Rewarree State Railway from Rewarree through the Ulwar State to join the Agra and Ajmere line near Bewai.

BONNIE, INDEED!

I.

To the members of Council, 'twas Temple who spoke—
"Every head in this Empire must bend to our yoke,
Let all members assist me, by lending a hand—
To lighten the fortunes of this happy land:
We'll send out some schedules and gather a tax,
And assess all the merchants at two or three lakhs,
On the Bar, and the Bench, and the Services call;
And be down on the fortunes of favour'd Bengal!"

II.

Richard Temple, he rides on a very high horse,
And he rents "Marble Halls" (at a low rent, of course),
Whilst the Public, poor folk, say, "Just e'en let him rest,
Or he'll double the figure at which we're assessed!"
He sends round the schedules and gathers the tax,
And assesses the merchants at two or three lakhs,
Lets not Bench, nor the Bar, nor the Services pass,
But is down on the fortunes of sleepy Madras!

III.

From Cochin in the south, to Lahore in the north,
A deep cry of purse-felt resentment bursts forth,
As some fifteen crore natives all feebly resisting,
Are taxed for a deficit never existing!
Temple sends out the schedules, and gathers the tax,
And assesses the merchants at two or three lakhs,
Makes the Bar, and the Bench, and the Services pay,
And comes down on the fortunes of cheeky Bombay.

IV.

Temple hied home to England, but could not stop long,
For the Stracheys discovered his Budget was wrong;
Still the tax is enforced, though the reason none knows
P'raps the Devil and Temple ken where the cash goes!
Whilst they send out the schedules, and gather the tax,
And assess all the merchants at two or three lakhs,
I'll be off to Old England:—it's perfectly clear,
It's all up with the fortunes of those who stop here!

SIR W. GREY.

The good characteristics of Sir William Grey's administration have been patience, tact, thorough conscientiousness, real office—that is, desk—government, and an utter disregard of consequences when duty pointed in one direction and interest seemed to point in another. The weak points of his administration have been a narrowness—Whiggery—in approaching great questions, and, let us say, a slowness to believe that other men of views different from his might nevertheless be as honest as himself. A stranger studying what Sir William had done in the past, and watching what he was doing in the present, would be likely to come to the conclusion that a great part of his time was spent in minuting against the Supreme Government, or some other body. Half of the rumours about minutes, against this, that, and the other, have arisen from the public belief that Sir William Grey was all but certain to be minuting on something. It must have been painful at times to some people to know that whatever a man was doing he would have to answer for it to Sir William Grey, and an inexorable minute; a minute pitiless in its logic—in insisting that one and one and one shall make neither more nor less than three—and yet, singularly enough, coming from a man who could be exceedingly merciful and forgiving even when he condemned. Sir William Grey has been on the whole a Bengal Whig, seeing and acting as a Whig even while feeling as a man. If Sir William Grey had been born to a title, and had remained in England, he never, we should say, would have sided with or felt with a Manchester or Birmingham meeting of workmen. But it also is certain that if he had been present on that long-to-be-remembered day when the yeomanry cut down the people of Manchester in peaceful meeting assembled on St. Peter's Fields, he never would have given the fatal order that somebody unhappily gave. Nay, we take it for certain that he would manfully and unhesitatingly have protested against the order before it was given, and minuted against it, unmercifully, afterwards. He has been, in Bengal, a Whig of that stamp and school; striving to do right, and hating oppression, as the old Whigs always did, but always also, when the test came evincing sympathies narrowed and warped by the routine which Whiggery seldom has risen above save in the person of some very distinguished man.

Popular, we should say, in the commonly understood meaning of the word, no one will term Sir William Grey; and few persons, we should think, are likely to class him among the foremost of Indian administrators, still less statesmen. Perhaps no assembly that could possibly be convoked in India would cheer heartily when his great services to India and England were told, though everyone would admit the services to be great and real, and the motive of the highest. The story would merely be one of quiet work, in all manner of secretariats and directorates, in Bengal, to which he altogether belongs. But without being popular, as popularity is usually understood, he has high respect wherever he is known. These, we think are, in general terms, the views that will remain in India connected with the name of Sir William Grey. When his portrait is put up in Calcutta, as it is to be, it should be marked, "The Last and one of the Best of the Bengal Civilians." Yes, we mean the last of an old school, excellent in its day, but never again to be resuscitated for high office in Bengal. We know not what course Mr. Campbell may take, but it is utterly impossible for him to take the same course, or feel in the same way as Sir William Grey.—Friend of India.

STATION TALK.

Seetapore, Feb, 17.—I hear that Mrs. Speedy, wife of the guardian of Master Alamayou, is going to Europe this month, and that the young gentleman in question is to be put to school at one of the hill stations, Mussoorie, most probably. The temperature is fast veering round to punkah-heat; one can feel it, and, if not, the early hour for divine service would set you thinking. "The Buffs" will be apt to wish themselves back at Dugshai before long, with all its enveloping clouds of the wet months. This station continues to maintain its reputation for salubrity. Wolves are becoming rather frequent visitors and close neighbours, an occasional one making its appearance on dark nights in the military lines. About six or seven miles out there is a "man-eater" which has caused immense alarm among the unfortunate natives by his assiduous endeavours to demonstrate his cannibalistic propensities. It is to be hoped that a successful competitor for the Rs. 50 reward for his destruction may soon be found.

Simla, Feb. 17.—Another slight fall of snow last night, or rather early this morning; more in the air. Our little Pedlington has been convulsed with the proceedings of our Commissioner, Major Parsons. In my last I gave you a hint as to the rumpus between the proprietor of the late U. I. C. A. warehouse and that official, regarding a certain roadway running alongside his premises. Yesterday the Commissioner prosecuted Mr. O'Connor, the proprietor, for not attending to his orders in removing the obstruction in the said road, and fined him Rs. 300 and sent him to prison, where he was detained all night, and for what I know is there still. A meeting of the municipal body was held this morning to take into consideration Major Parsons's conduct as Chairman of the Municipal Commission, in setting aside the sanction accorded by two of their body to Mr. O'Connor in the road affair. In the course of the angry discussion that arose out of the matter, it came out that Major Parsons had prosecuted Mr. O'Connor on behalf of the Municipal body, but he had received no sanction from that body for such proceeding, and he was obliged to confess that he had acted in his magisterial capacity; thus he had been prosecutor and judge, and under the shelter of the municipal rules had inflicted a fine quite unauthorised by such rules; in fact, he had enforced the penalty under a section of the Penal Code which could not be twisted in any way to refer to such a case, and on which the municipal body could not prosecute. I am glad to say that the members of the municipal body acted as one man in this matter; they felt that the Commissioner's conduct in the imprisonment of a European under those circumstances was an indignity to the whole of the residents of Simla, and they told him so. Another meeting is to be held to-morrow morning, and I doubt not the sanction of the two Municipal Commissioners to Mr. O'Connor to lower the roadway in question will be upheld, and thus the Commissioner's proceeding will be declared illegal throughout. I suspect the said official is beginning to feel that he has put his foot in it. I hope he will be made to smart for it. Mr. O'Connor is not a man to let him off easily, and already proceedings have commenced.

Chinsurah, Feb. 18.—Yesterday for the first time since the cessation of the periodical rains we had a slight shower. A sharp breeze was blowing from the south, which brought the temperature down to something like the standard for December, but although it remained cloudy throughout the day, the downpour itself was too limited to have any lasting effect on the weather, which already is giving indications of the approach of summer. Chinsurah, too, like other places, experienced the shock of an earthquake early on the morning of Thursday last, but the vibration could not have been very great, as it was discerned only by a few. I was not of that number, so cannot pretend to give its direction, nor the space of time which it lasted. An item of information in the Indian Daily News of the 15th brings travelling by railway under a new light. By it we learn that besides the old peril of having our heads broke and our limbs smashed, or worse still, of being made mince-meat of, we now stand a chance of being given over to the police at the next station for the heinous offence of feeling thirsty. Yes, courteous reader; stare not! "The very head and front of the offending" of a party so given up, had this extent, no more, though the consequences to which it led might have been serious. I will explain. A native passenger in a third-class carriage called for some water at the station of Serampore, which was handed to him in a brass vessel, commonly called a lotah. While in the act of drinking the train made a movement to start, and the railway porter, on the watch for his masters' interests, as railway porters, sometimes as it happens to their own detriment, always are, darted forward to take the vessel from the hands of the other, and in doing so made a false step, which might have precipitated him under the wheels. He, however, managed to save himself by clinging to the door of the compartment near which he fell, with his feet resting upon the foot rail. Thus he remained till the train got clear of the platform, when he jumped to the ground and got off without sustaining any material injuries. So much for the porter. The poor passenger, on the train arriving at Biddabatty, found himself in the custody of the police, to whom the guard consigned him for prosecution (for what ?) before a magistrate. Should he be a ruminating animal, he has had ample leisure and opportunity to do so on the quality of the water kept at railway stations and to what it brings a man.—Delhi Gazette Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

High Court, N.W.P.—Mr. W. A. Raikes, B.A., of Oriel College, Oxford, and Lincoln's Inn, Barrister-at-Law, has been enrolled as an advocate of the High Court, N.W.P.

The Maharajah of Puttialah.—We hear that the Maharajah of Puttialah lately paid a visit to the shrine of Calighat, where his Highness killed with one swoop a buffalo as a sacrifice to the goddess.—Indian Mirror.

Divorce Court.—Lord William Hay, the co-respondent in the divorce suit of Gordon v. Gordon, is said to have appealed to the Privy Council against the decision of the Commissioner of Umballa and the Chief Court of the Punjab.

Mr. R. Davies, the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, it is said, will not visit Dera Ismail Khan, but will proceed northwards by the frontier posts of Tank, Bunnoo, and Kohar, to Peshawur, which he will probably reach about the 25th of March. The party expect to be back in Lahore about the beginning of April.

A Rumour.—The Bengal Times (Dacca) has, it tells us, heard a rumour that Lord Mayo sent home by the last mail the names of the following persons as fit recipients of the Star of India :—Baboos Prannath Bose Surbadhikari, Peary Chand Mittra, Kishoree Chand Mittra, Rajendra Lall Mittra, Messrs. J. B. Roberts, A. Mackenzie, C. K. Dove, Josiah Rowe, and Sheikh Muneeroodeen.

Railways.—The place which will be vacated by Mr. Cecil Stephenson, of the East Indian Railway, proceeding home on leave, will not be filled up. His duties will be performed by Messrs. Palmer and Sibly conjointly. Mr. Carter, Deputy Traffic Manager, will act for Mr. Batchelor, who proceeds home on the 15th proximo, for fifteen months' furlough.—Englishman.

Mr. Forsyth.—Indian Public Opinion of the 21st inst. says :—"Mr. Forsyth will leave Lahore to-morrow en route to England, where we hope he will derive that benefit to his eyesight which the treatment of scientific oculists can alone give. We are glad to hear that he is likely to return to India at the expiration of six months. We hope that he will return covered with honours and re-invigorated for the important task of drawing the trade of Central Asia to India."

The Wahabees.—Our Lahore contemporary says :—"In the Swat country, the Wahabees are increasing in influence and audacity. Akhwand Sahib goes to the Musjid every day to make inquiries from the travellers who happen to come there. On Feb. 15 a traveller arrived there ; Akhwand Sahib asked him what was his religion ; he replied, 'Wahabee.' At that Akhwand Sahib remained silent, but one of his servants smote him dead on the ground. Four of the murdered man's relatives, it is said, have started from Peshawur to be avenged on the murderer."

Dinner to Sir W. Grey.—The members of the Bengal Civil Service entertained Sir William Grey at dinner in the Town Hall, Calcutta, on Saturday, Feb. 25. Some eighty gentlemen sat down to dinner, but as the entertainment was considered to be strictly private, reporters were not admitted. Mr. Justice Loch, the senior member of the service, presided. Several farewell addresses have been presented to Sir William Grey at Calcutta. One came from the Calcutta Trades Association, and one from the Bengal Chamber of Commerce.

A Suit against the Government.—Messrs. Howard Brothers are we hear, going to fight the local Government in the District Court with a big English barrister. They are said to claim some Rs. 27,000 for the occupation by the standing camp at Nagpore of the open ground near the Railway Station, which they had taken on a long lease from the proprietor. The Government at first did not want to give them anything, on the plea perhaps that the land was waste and unoccupied, but ultimately agreed to pay the munificent sum of Rs. 500.—Central India Times.

Italian Commerce.—It appears that the Italian captain to whom we referred as having gone on to Mandalay to negotiate a commercial treaty with the King of Burmah had previously concluded a like treaty with the Siamese Government. This is the direct offspring of the Suez Canal, and points to a new era of trade for the Mediterranean powers. Italy is not sufficiently settled to strike out very largely in commercial enterprise, but she will, we trust, creep on gradually and steadily in the great race in which the greater the number of competitors the bet er it is for each.—Friend of India.

A New Weekly English Paper at Lahore.—An addition to e press is proposed to be started in Lahore under the name of the hahore Courant. Its object is to supply the wants of the English speaking portion of the native community, in keeping them acquainted with the opinions of the press on the leading topics of the day, and for affording them an opportunity of freely expressing their opinions and views on matters of general or local interest. To fulfil this end it is necessary that the paper should be cheap, and the price has accordingly been fixed at one anna per copy ; the issue to be once a week.—Indian Public Opinion.

Trading in Children.—The trade in children for the worst purposes seems to be very much more extensive than was supposed possible. The Nimar police have rescued thirty-two girls and two boys, and have apprehended a host of persons concerned in the kidnapping. In some cases Colonel Taylor, Inspector of Police, C.P., says a good-looking girl who can sing and dance well, "with other accomplishments," will bring from Rs. 2,000 to Rs. 3,000 in the Bombay market. These disclosures show how little we know of some parts of India, and how much the country really has needed a "Criminal Tribe's Bill."—Friend of India.

The Russians at Samarkand.—According to the Lahore paper, some news regarding the Russian occupation of Samarkand is to hand. The troops who are in the city have behaved to the people of the district generally with considerable moderation. They are said, however, to be on particularly bad terms with shopkeepers, with whom they continually quarrel. A Jew, named Abdool Rahman, was recently killed in one of these brawls, and the murderer, a Russian soldier, was arrested, but soon restored to liberty without punishment. The river Oxus had risen to a considerable height, and overflowed its banks, destroying many villages and boats, and occasioning considerable loss of life

An Adventure with the Hill-men.—Some officers on duty at one of the frontier forts sent in a camel to Peshawur with an empty cask of beer to be exchanged for a full one. An irregular cavalry trooper was in charge of the camel. On the road some hill-men attacked the trooper, threw a blanket over his head, and carried him off with the camel and the empty cask to a village in the hills. They detained him there a prisoner for four days, and then sent him back to the fort, with a note to the effect that the man was too old and useless to keep, but that the camel was a useful animal, which they would keep, and as for the empty cask, they intended to change that into a capital drum. The trooper had a twenty-rupee note in his possession ; but the hill-men regarding this as a worthless piece of paper, did not care to appropriate it.

The Arbitrary Proceedings at Simla.—Indian Public Opinion hears that the Chief Court has directed the immediate release of Mr. E. T. O'Connor, a European British subject and house proprietor of Simla, who was lately sentenced to twenty days' imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 300 under section 291, Indian Penal Code, for cutting away a portion of the public mall. The Deputy Commissioner considered he had jurisdiction to deal with a European British subject under section 2 of Act XXII. of 1870 ; but that section merely renders (unless there be something repugnant in the context) certain penal enactments passed by the Legislative Council applicable to Europeans as well as to other subjects of the British Crown, and does not confer a general jurisdiction to try Europeans in criminal offences on mofussil judges, who can only exercise in such cases the powers which are given to them by 53 Geo. III., c. 155 ; section 105, section 163 of Act XXV. of 1861 ; or by Act XXI. of 1869, known as the European Vagrancy Act.

More of the Loshais.—Some important telegrams have been received since our last regarding the Loshais :—"Cachar, Feb. 23. —The Loshais attacked Jalnacherra this morning, but were driven back by the guard. Cutleecherra, Alexandrapore, and Barrykandy coolies all bolted again. Seller and Cooke are at Cutleecherra bungalow with guard. Walliker, Edwards, Service, and Shuttleworth are at Jalnacherra in stockade. Cutleecherra or Barrykandy expects to be attacked to morrow. Silchar, Feb. 24.—It is reported that the Loshais have attacked Cutleecherra and Jalnacherra. The troops under Mr. Daly have gone to Hylakandy. Sixty men of the 44th, under Mr. Williams, have gone to Monierkhall. Mr. Edgar is now believed to be safe with the troops. Lord Napier is expected to arrive here to-day.—Feb. 25.—The Loshais are reported to be coming in force from Chittagong to avenge the deaths at Monierkhall. One hundred men of the 44th are now starting for Jalnacherra, and all of the 4th for Monierkhall. Lord Napier arrived here last evening. No news from Messrs. Edgar and Burland." A telegram from Cachar, of the 27th, tells us, we are glad to say, that "Road-making to the frontier posts has been determined on as of paramount importance." The telegram proceeds :—"Edgar is expected to-day at Monierkhall. The head-quarters and remainder of the 4th N. I. move up to Cachar. Two companies of the 43rd N. I. proceed from Shillong to Sylhet to be replaced at Shillong by troops from Gowhatty. The head-quarters of the 44th N. I have gone to Jalnacherra." The following telegram is from Cachar, dated the 28th Feb. :—"Mr. Edgar expected hourly. He was at Monierkhall last night. Road-making to commence at once." Mr. Edgar's safety may, therefore, be looked upon as secured.

Another Pice Paper.—Last week we mentioned that a weekly pice paper had been started at Dacca, and we now hear that a second at the same price has been started in opposition.—Englishman.

Financial.—The Indian Daily News hears that "a resolution has recently been passed by the Government of India in the Financial Department, in supersession of a previous one, classifying officers of the several secretariats under that Government, and regulating their travelling allowances when proceeding with the Governor-General to Simla. The under-secretaries and assistant-secretaries, who comprise the first-class officers, are to receive, in addition to the bona fide travelling expenses for themselves, a travelling allowance for their families and children, viz., for a family, Rs. 150, for a child above 12 years of age, Rs. 50, and below that age, Rs. 30, but in no case is the travelling allowance for families to exceed Rs. 600. On their arrival at Simla such officers are also to receive a house rent allowance. The officers and assistants drawing salaries from Rs. 300 to 700 will comprise the second-class officers, and are to receive their travelling allowances as before, and on their arrival at the Hills, the usual Simla allowance. For the clerks and writers, who comprise the third-class officers, a similar rule has been passed."

The Executive and Judicial Services in the Punjab.—Indian Public Opinion says:—"It is rumoured that the following proposals will be shortly made by the Committee now sitting at Lahore:—1st. That the number of districts in the Punjab be reduced from thirty-two to twenty. 2nd. That a Deputy Commissioner and a Judge be appointed to each district. The former to have executive charge with a share of the criminal work; the latter to hear all civil appeals. The pay of both officers to range from Rs. 1,000 to 1,500 per mensem. We fail to see that any benefit will accrue to the province by this ill-advised arrangement. The object of it is that the Deputy Commissioner may be able to devote more time to executive matters, and at the same time take a large share of criminal work. This object would, we think, be fully attained by the simple expedient of appointing an additional Commissioner to each division, who would hear civil appeals from all subordinate officers in the division, thus relieving Deputy Commissioners of much of their present work, and allowing them to devote the time so saved to the executive management of the district."

An old Mutineer.—One of the worst murderers of the Mutiny has just been brought to justice. The story of his crime is thus told:—"A number of fugitives from Fyzabad, among whom were Lieutenants Cautley, Thomas, Lindsay and English, of the 22nd N.I., and Lieutenant Ritchie, of the 13th Light Field Battery, had made their way towards Azimgurgh as far as a village called Mahooadabur, on the bank of the Manorama, in the Goruckpore district. Lindsay was cut down as they were preparing to cross the stream, and the rest where shot down or beaten to death with clubs, with the exception of two only—Lieutenant Cautley and Sergeant Busher, who gained the opposite bank, but they were closely pursued by one Jafir Ali, an influential zemindar, and others. Cautley became exhausted, and was easily overtaken, in spite of the good offices of a friendly peasant. He was knocked down by a blow from a lattee, and as he was attempting to rise to his knees Jafir Ali deliberately shot him in the breast. From that time till quite recently Jafir Ali has been a fugitive, and is said to have made a pilgrimage to Mecca. On his return he was arrested, and the judge of Goruckpore (Mr. Benson) sentenced him and three others to death. Before the High Court at Allahabad, N.W.P., the Government Advocate said he would not press for a capital sentence except against Jafir Ali, the ringleader and actual murderer. The Court, Mr. Justice Turner and Mr. Justice Turnbull, after some consideration acquitted the other prisoners, but confirmed the sentence of death against Jafir Ali."

The Calcutta Panics.—Dr. Mouat writes as follows to the Indian Daily News:—"Mr. Kaye has, I see, objected to the notice which you wrote of my letter regarding Calcutta in May and June, 1857. The word 'mis-stated,' as occurring in my letter, was a misprint for 'overstated.' No one can fairly charge Mr. Kaye with mis-statement, and I certainly did not do so. But that Mr. Kaye, in his valuable and graphic history of the Sepoy Revolt, has done grave injustice to the European community of Calcutta, and that he has elevated Lord Canning unduly at the expense of his countrymen, I still believe, and I could produce passages from his work to show. You have the work at hand, and you have only to reprint the statement in pp. 112 and 113, and the passage in pp. 113 and 114, beginning with 'It was not strange,' to show that I have good ground for my belief. I have no doubt whatever that Lord Canning did not in May 'discern the true state of things,' and I know that what has been attributed to panic in the European community was really a want of confidence in Government at the time, which many men felt and openly expressed. There was no want of confidence in themselves to meet any danger that might present itself. The whole passage in page 125, from 'Lord Canning knowing well the constitution of the European community,' I consider to be gravely unjust to that community, as the result proved. For after the enrolment of the volunteers there was no further alarm in any portion of the European community. That the MS. journals of nervous ladies, and the idle rumours that were current at the time, should find a place in such a work as that of Mr. Kaye is, I think, to be regretted. But should my letter cause a careful consideration of the whole question, I shall rejoice exceedingly. I am quite satisfied that the inquiry cannot be in safer and more conscientious hand, than those of Mr. Kaye, for whose ability and general accuracy as a historian I have the greatest admiration and respect. All that I wish and intend is to relieve my fellow countrymen in Calcutta of the charge of cowardice which has been recorded against them. I trust, therefore, that those who have kept notes of those momentous times will communicate them to Mr. Kaye through your columns. It will then be for him, as an impartial historian, to sum up the evidence and deliver the verdict on which posterity will rely.

The Berars.—A very comprehensive and interesting report by Mr. Saunders, the Resident at Hyderabad, on the Berars and the territories of the Nizam, has just been made public. The Berars were transferred to British management in the days of Lord Dalhousie, in order to provide the means of paying the military contingent which had been maintained for the protection of the Nizam's country since 1813. So long as this force had to look to the Government of his Highness for its pay, there were constant complaints about arrears, which tended greatly to sap the efficiency of all ranks. Not unfrequently advances had to be made from our own treasuries with the view of remedying discontent. Thence resulted references to the native Government, and irritation to both sides. The Hyderabad Treasury was empty, and could not supply the requisite amount of money. The British Government grudged lending its own officers any longer when there was no certainty that their salary would be forthcoming except from its own revenues. In the end the Nizam assigned for the support of the force certain fertile districts, part of which he regained after the Mutiny. In regard to what still remains under British management, the original condition still holds good, that its revenues shall be devoted to keeping up the contingent and to the cost of the general administration. The balance, if any, has to be placed to the credit of the Nizam. It is no small cause of praise to the Indian Government that since the assignment a sum amounting to nearly a quarter of a million sterling has accrued of surplus to the Nizam. In the interval much has been done for the improvement of the Berars. A great impetus to commerce was given in the time of the American War, when cotton, from being one only out of many other staples, became the one predominating product. What is now the extent of the trade may be best judged from the simple fact that in Khamgaon—the largest of the cotton marts—a million sterling changes hands in the course of the season. The effect of this trade and of the enhanced value of the land has been to increase the provincial revenues from £420,905 in 1862-63 to £704,500 in 1869-70. With a larger income the Government has been able to spend liberally on everything connected with the welfare of the people. Justice has been brought within the reach of the poorest; a settlement of the land revenue on a ryotwaree system akin to that which prevails in Bombay is approaching completion; attention is being paid to the preservation and extension of forests; the police have been gradually reorganised so as more thoroughly to control the criminal classes; gaols have been constructed equal to any on British soil; sanitation and conservancy have not been lost sight of; railways and roads have been constructed; and, lastly, a good education is available to all classes of the people.

Imports.—Calcutta, March 1.—We have again to record a week of extreme general dulness, and in this respect there does not seem to be any present prospect of relief. Prices of staple goods are mostly somewhat lower since last mail, but the concessions made have not encouraged buyers to come forward in greater numbers. During the next week there will be a number of native holidays, and business will, as usual, be more or less restricted on this account.

Exports.—Calcutta, March 1.—Saltpetre: We have heard of no transactions for shipments in this article to report during the last week; only about 100 tons of crude kinds have changed hands for refining purposes, at prices ranging from Rs. 7-1 to 7-2 per maund. The stock is estimated in the market at about 2,000 bags. Rice: A fair amount of business has transpired in Table kinds at prices quoted in our last. In Moonghy kinds we have heard of no sales, but for shipments of Balam Rice business is on a little scale. Linseed: This article is much inquired for for shipment, but, owing to the paucity of stock, we have heard of no transaction. The new crop will arrive in the market after two weeks. Rapeseed: For local consumption we have heard of some transactions done since the date of our last at prices Rs. 3-14 to 4-10, but for shipments nothing doing. Teelseed: During the week some transactions have been done for shipments to Marseilles at Rs. 4-9 to 4-14 per factory maund. Poppyseed: Some sales have been made during the week at Rs. 4-1 per maund. The stock is small in the market, and Rs. 4-4 is asked by the sellers. Jute: Owing to the advanced rates of freight we have heard of no transaction to report in this article. Raw Silk: We have heard of no transaction to report in this head. The stock is about 200 maunds of both Jungypore and Cossimbazar. Silk Piece Goods: Nothing doing, and no stock.

DECENTRALISED FINANCE.

In his speech in the Madras Legislative Council on Feb. 17 the Hon. Mr. Macfadyen made the following remarks on the late Financial Resolution of the Indian Government:—

"In the meantime there are one or two points not affected by the proposed amendments, and to these I will briefly refer. The first and most important is of course the Financial Resolution of the Government of India, whereby about seventy-nine lakhs per annum are handed over to this Government to be expended on certain specified objects, which have been hitherto Imperial cares. Now, I will frankly admit that on first reading the resolution referred to—which I did in a Bombay paper under the, to me, fascinating heading of Financial Decentralisation—I was completely taken with it. I hailed it as the 'thin edge of the wedge'—the 'first step in the right direction,' &c., &c., and I was almost persuaded to believe that for local Governments some good thing had at last come out of Bengal. But my hopes sprung up as quickly to be withered as soon as was the Prophet's gourd. For a more careful perusal of the resolution that is destined, say some, to mark a new era in the history of India, has led me reluctantly to the conclusion that mountains in labour can even now-a-days produce nothing much better than they did in the olden time. It may be, my Lord, that confidence is a plant of slow growth in commercial bosoms, but I was more than willing to accept with thankfulness any gift, however small, that tended to honest decentralisation and to the increase of local responsibility. It was in this spirit that I set myself to study the manifesto, that is, in its own words, 'To effect a wide change in Indian administration; that is, to tend to more harmony in action and feeling between the Supreme and the provincial Governments?' The result of my most candid consideration is to me very disheartening. I seek in vain for the traces of these 'impartial and stedfast minds that we all so gladly attribute to the Viceroy and his Council.' I find instead high-sounding and liberal phrases that barely conceal the narrow and selfish policy that stalks triumphant through the whole resolution. For what does it all mean? Stripped of useless verbiage, what the Government of India says is, simply, 'Here are a number of objects, the annual expenditure on which must, from the nature of things, go on increasing—we cannot be bothered finding funds for them any longer. We'll compromise with you here. Madras, take seventy-nine lakhs, and go to the local taxes for anything more you require.' The great point is, however, 'Don't worry us; we wash our hands of you, and we hold you responsible if anything goes wrong. So now be happy.' This is not, I think, any caricature of the real gist of the resolution—indeed it is under, rather than overdrawn, for how are the seventy-nine lakhs that are thrown at us calculated? In the first place the actual grants during 1870-71 for the several objects handed over are taken; then fifty-two lakhs are deducted—why or wherefore I don't know, and why it was not a hundred or twenty lakhs, I am equally at a loss to understand. However, there it is, fifty-two lakhs have to be provided before Madras has as much to spend on the objects entrusted to her as she had in the year now ending. But this is not all. The estimates of 1870-71 were framed as famine estimates. That is to say, no more money was asked for than just sufficed to keep above starvation point the several departments of Government, so that we are first called on to make good the fifty-two lakhs now taken from us, and in addition have to raise the money required to put and keep on an efficient footing the departments that have been ground down of late to the very lowest point. This is undoubtedly decentralisation of a sort. It will enable the Imperial budget to depict in rosy colours the saving that has been effected; it may possibly assist in the reduction or abolition of the income-tax, but how dearly these things will be bought local funds alone will know. The heart-burnings and oppressions engendered by Imperial taxes will remain the same, though the taxes be called local. The poor taxpayer will find that his last condition is worse than his first—his creditors will be two instead of one; and the local fund creditor will be the more rapacious and cruel of the two, for it is responsible for the due carrying out of the objects handed over, and to do this, money must be had by hook or by crook. Decentralisation, as understood by the Supreme Government, is rather like a one-sided application of the Scripture injunction, 'Bear ye one another's burdens.' 'Just so,' says the Government of India,—'here, Madras, Bombay, &c., bear this burden. We are tired of it.' No doubt a fictitious kind of prosperity will be made in this way to appear in the Imperial budget. But to transfer a burden is not to destroy it—discontent and disaffection may be bred, and will be as real, though burdensome taxes bear the imprimatur of a local Government instead of emanating from Bengal. It is, therefore, hypocrisy to pretend that the Government of India deserves any gratitude of provincial Governments for the measure they have just framed. It is apparently intended to try and stave off the day of true decentralisation, the day when the Imperial Government will say to the local Government, 'Your contribution to Imperial objects is so much, pay it, use the rest of your income as your local wisdom dictates—but above all, see that your province is kept prosperous, that its state is one of progress, and then you need dread no further interference from us.' It is, however, a hopeful sign that even the present abortive attempt at decentralisation has been made—it shows that the subject is being thought of, and by-and-by the right solution will assuredly be arrived at."

Miscellaneous.

Civil.—The junior Civilians of the Madras Presidency, who recently memorialised the Secretary of State on the subject of their grievances, have resolved not to prosecute the memorial, as the revised rules concede its principal prayer, namely, that the minimum furlough allowance should be restored to the old rate of £500 a-year.

The Madras and Bombay Railway.—The Great Indian Peninsula Railway authorities have announced to the Government that their line to Raichore, with the exception of the Kristna Bridge, will be ready for traffic by the end of the present month, and the Madras Railway authorities report that they will have their part of the line to Raichore ready for traffic by the 1st of April.

Burmah.—The Political Agent at Mandalay having made a representation to the King regarding the frequency of robberies committed on the Thayetmo frontier by bands of dacoits from Burmese territory, his Majesty at once issued the most peremptory orders on the subject to the officer in chief authority on that frontier. Attention is also promised to the raids upon British timber traders towards eastern Karennee. Altogether the King is most obliging, enchanted with himself, with us, and with his new electric telegraph. We believe, indeed, that no request whatever sent to his Majesty by his own telegraph need fear refusal.—Pioneer.

The Hyderabad State Railway.—A correspondent of the Bombay Gazette says:—"Orders for beginning work on the State Railway are still daily expected. The engineers, whose tents formed quite a camp at Bolarum for several weeks, have all dispersed—gone off to their various posts along the line, taking with them some clerks and a few of the overseers originally employed in marking out the line and the survey; these will meanwhile restore missing pegs, &c. No work has yet been attempted, of course. Orders may arrive at any time, and it is high time they did, for the fine cold weather has been lost, in which much might have been accomplished. On this point, however, we can at present say no more, beyond mentioning the regretable fact. There are four divisions—Waddy, at junction with G.I.P. Railway, Mr. Luff, engineer; Tandoor, or Cogny, Mr. Izatt, engineer; Shevaredy Pett, or Ghaut, Mr. Reynolds, engineer; Hyderabad, Mr. Tyndall, engineer. The large subordinate working staff will only be appointed after orders for commencing work have been received.

ALARM AT PONDICHERRY.—Pondicherry was alarmed the other day by the appearance of a large man-of-war and the firing of guns from her. The horrors of a bombardment were foreseen, and traitors suggested a general exodus. A gallant French officer sallied forth with the determination—"Je verrai Pondicherry en ruines mais je ne cederai jamais!" But the awful visitant turned out to be only her Britannic Majesty's ship of war Forte, bringing Admiral Cockburn, who desired to pay M. Bontemps a visit. The Forte sailed afterwards for Trincomalee.

MILITARY.—Colonel Hay Campbell, Superintendent of the Gun Carriage Factory, Madras, has been compelled by ill-health to apply for leave to England for two years, on medical certificate. Major Henegan, R.A., Commissary of Ordnance, now in charge of the arsenal, will probably be appointed to act for Colonel Campbell at Vepery.—It was intended to retain in India the drivers of the two batteries of Royal Horse Artillery ordered home from the Madras Presidency, but the men having respectfully memorialised the military authorities not to be separated from their batteries, a telegram has been received from home ordering that those who wish to return to England with their batteries are to be allowed to do so. All, except five in the two batteries referred to, have elected to go home.

THE LATE TRICHINOPOLY DEFAMATION CASE.—Dr. Applin, the complainant in the well-known defamation case, which recently came off at Trichinopoly, filed a petition in the High Court, praying the Court to call for the record of the case. The petition was disposed of on Friday (Feb. 24) in the Appellate Court, Mr. Justice Holloway and Mr. Justice Kindersley presiding. Mr. Green, barrister-at-law, appeared for the petitioner. As Mr. Green was unable to quote any authority to show that the Court could issue a mandamus to compel a justice of the peace to commit a case, their Lordships were of opinion that they could not interfere. Mr. Justice Holloway observed that he had looked through the papers, and the evidence was of such a nature that it was not desirable that it should be brought before the Courts. He would say that it was best for a person to stand upon his own character, and not to mind what others said of him. If all the slanders that were spoken, especially in this country, where idleness and gossip were so common, were to be brought before courts of justice, the Courts would soon find that they would have nothing else to do but to inquire into such matters. For his own part, therefore, he could not say that he was sorry that a positive prohibition of law prevented the present case coming before the Court.—Madras Mail.

THE 19TH N.I.—We regret to hear that the state of affairs in the 19th Regiment Madras Native Infantry, which has just embarked for Singapore, is extremely unsatisfactory. When marched down to Madras for embarkation the men put forward certain demands in the way of advances of pay in excess of their regulation rights, and accompanied their demands by threats that they would not embark unless they were complied with. The military authorities, inspired, let us hope, by a conviction that the men's demands were reasonable although illegal, conceded what was asked. But the men were still discontented, and put forward new and, we are told, preposterous demands. The conspiracy assumed the character of an organised mutiny, and we are told that the men refused to obey orders on parade. The commanding officer had several men arrested, but as the whole regiment had combined, the arrest did nothing to bring the men to reason. What did the military authorities now do? Did they march out a European regiment and a battery of artillery and teach the mutinous sepoys that obedience is the first duty of a soldier? No, they conceded all that was asked, released the prisoners, and the regiment embarked last Monday for Singapore chuckling at their easy victory over the Government. As the Government and military officials maintain a profound secrecy respecting this case, we cannot be sure that the circumstances we have detailed are absolutely accurate, or that the gravity of this affair is not exaggerated; but, in the meantime, we think it our duty to make public the circumstances that have been brought to our knowledge.—Madras Times.

THE ACTING COMMAND-IN-CHIEF IN THE MADRAS ARMY.—His Excellency, General McCleverty, the Commander-in-Chief, passed his examination by a medical board on Saturday, February 25, and need we add, obtained a medical certificate for six months' leave. He has been suffering of late from fever contracted doubtless by his arduous tours of duty during the summer months on the Neilgherries, and by his indefatigable exertions to see with his own eyes the different portions of the army that he commands. He will arrive in England shortly after the Parliamentary Committee of Inquiry into the finances of India has commenced to sit, and it will most probably be his fate to hear that that committee have recognised the financial expediency of abolishing the two minor commands-in-chief in India as soon as they become vacant, if not of at once dispensing with the costly services of the present incumbents. It is Major-General Shubrick and not Major-General Borton who will act as Commander-in-Chief of the Madras Army during the absence of Lieutenant-General McCleverty. General Shubrick was about to proceed on furlough to Europe, but has altered his mind since the chief has decided upon going home. This determination of General Shubrick to remain at his post at Secunderabad is not unlikely to cause wailing and gnashing of teeth in certain quarters. In the first place, Major-General Pritchard, who had made all necessary preparations for rushing off to Hyderabad to assume command, will be compelled to remain in Madras in his old post of Deputy Judge Advocate General. In the second place Colonel Touch, instead of stepping into the snug post of Deputy Judge Advocate General, finds himself very much in the position of a man "whose occupation is gone," and is doomed to rustication for a time on the Neilgherries. In the third place, Lieut.-General McCleverty has been, as the Yankees would say, pretty considerably sold, inasmuch as the appointments—comdemned on nearly all sides as unmitigated jobs—he has made just on the eve of leaving India probably for good, become, at all events for a time, null and void. So far as Colonel Touch is concerned, we trust he will remain in the Military Account Department, where he has done excellent service, and for which he is admirably qualified. It is unreasonable to suppose that he can be so well fitted for the Judicial Department as men who have been serving in it for a score of years. Besides, were Colonel Touch a very Solon in military law it is questionable whether the Commander-in-Chief would be justified in exalting him per saltum to the head of the department. One of the misfortunes of having elderly chiefs like Sir G. Le Marchant and General McCleverty is that they are precluded from getting about the country and making the acquaintance of the officers and troops under their command. Thus many a good man is doomed to work in out-of-the-way stations unknown and unappreciated, and when his turn comes for promotion he is either forgotten altogether or openly sacrificed to some favourite at head-quarters.—Madras Mail, Feb. 27.

Bombay.

THE LATE MR. MOROBA CANOBA.—The coroner's jury which inquired into the circumstances connected with the death of Mr. Moroba Canoba and his wife has come to the conclusion that the deceased deliberately committed suicide.

HIGH COURT.—Another Hindoo, the second, Mr. Mahadew Govind Ranaday, M.A., LL.B., Assistant Professor of Literature in the Elphinstone College, has qualified in Bombay as an advocate of the High Court.

CIVIL.—The Government of Bombay lately applied to the Government of India for a decision of the following points:—If an absentee on privilege leave is entitled to draw house-rent or tentage, when he places his house or tent at the disposal of his locum-tenens, and the latter does not avail himself of the offer? If such absentee can draw house-rent or tentage when no substitute is appointed in his place? And if the ruling of the resolution of the 12th March, 1869, is applicable to military officers in civil employ, and to uncovenanted servants? The Government of India has answered all three questions in the affirmative.

ARCHÆOLOGICAL.—In a communication to the Government of Bombay the Supreme Government has expressed a hope that Major-General Cunninghan, the Director-General of the Archæological Survey of India, may be furnished from time to time with copies of any papers or reports that may now be on record, or may hereafter be received, bearing upon archæological questions, as they would materially assist in providing a substantial basis for future operations, and has suggested that local officers and private individuals interested in, or possessing any information in regard to, Indian Archæology, should be invited to place themselves in direct communication with Major-General Cunningham.

Prospects of Kurrachee.—The Sindian states that the missing link between Kotree and Mooltan will find a formidable competitor in the projected railway from Baroda to Delhi. The distance between Lahore and Bombay via Jubbulpore is about 1,600 miles, while it will be little over 1,100 via Baroda. The traffic which now finds its way through the Bolan Pass to Kurrachee, and thence by sea to Bombay, will inevitably be transferred to Peshawur as soon as the Great Northern Railway is opened; from thence it will be carried by unbroken railway communication, either to Bombay or Calcutta. Some years ago we pointed out the fact that the most direct route for communication with Europe would follow a line drawn through Kurrachee and Ajmere to Agra. There can be no question that the opening of the Suez Canal will stimulate the completion of railway communication through Asiatic Turkey, and that at no very distant date a line of mail steamers will be found running between the mouths of the Euphrates and Indus. When that day arrives, Kurrachee may again become a place of importance.

Military.—From the Bombay Gazette's military letter we take the following:—Apropos of inspections, I am glad to note a welcome order that has been lately issued by the Horse Guards to the effect that in future regiments in India need only be inspected once a year (in the autumn). This order will be much appreciated not only by those in command, but more so by the soldiers themselves. The spring inspection, which previous to this order had to be held some time in April, was not only a farce, but on account of the heat in nearly every station where British troops are quartered was (if carried out properly) conducted at great personal inconvenience to all, but was more frequently gone through pro forma as an unpleasant duty which had to be performed, and, if possible, generals commanding divisions delegated this duty to officers in command of outstations. The new system of inspecting once a year will be more satisfactory. A thorough and searching inspection in every point can be taken at a more appropriate season, and the efficiency of regiments will be far better tested in this manner than by the addition of an incomplete inspection in one of the hottest months of the year. As is usual at this time of the year, a number of appointments have and are about to become vacant by officers going home. Many of these have been filled up (acting), the following being among the principal. Lieutenant-Colonel Morris, assistant quartermaster-general N.D.A., has been appointed to act as assistant quartermaster-general of the army during Major Hogg's absence in England on private affairs. Majors Bowen (second in command 3rd N.I.); Hanson, second in command of the 9th; Hill, of the 14th N.I.; and Wodehouse, wing officer of the 8th, are all in orders for furlough. If the principle of filling up these appointments by seniority is strictly carried out, these vacancies will provide for a few of the many unemployed officers at present on the Adjutant-General's list. In many cases it is but fair that these appointments should be filled up regimentally; but, on the other hand, it is equally necessary to look after the interests of those held officers of the Staff Corps whose numbers increase yearly to an alarming extent, and for whom it is very difficult to find suitable employment. If it were not that I should be going over all the same old ground again I could reiterate the fact at some length of the failure of the Staff Corps becoming far and far more self-evident. I have heard it expressed lately on several occasions by old officers (whose opinion carries some weight with it) that sooner or later, notwithstanding the Duke of Argyll's emphatic assertion to the contrary, the measure must force itself upon the Government, of holding out some inducement for seniors to retire, and thus to thin out the already overcrowded list of field officers in the Staff Corps seeking employ. I know several officers who are serving on in the firm belief that this must take place sooner or later, and there is no doubt that some well digested scheme capable of being carried out would not only have a very desirable effect, but would be a tremendous saving to the State. This, however, those in authority steadily ignore, and it would appear as if all the writing in the world would never convince them to the contrary. Practically they must be aware of it. Promotion and employment in departments (except with regard to acting appointments) is meanwhile utterly stagnated. The only "pucka" appointment that I am aware of as having fallen vacant during the past month is the second in command of the 13th N.I. (vacated by Lieut. Colonel MacGowan on account of ill-health). This has been bestowed on Colonel Ewen Grant.

Imports.—Bombay, March 4.—The market for Grey Goods during the week has contir ued quiet, with but a moderate demand both from first hands and the bazaar, and rates at the close show a decline in most instances of 1 to 2 annas per piece. The principal clearances since the mail left have been in 9-inch Shirtings and Jaconets, the latter description being in improved request at former values; but 46-inch Shirtings and 3½ and 3¾ lbs. Madapollams have also been in fair request, although the clearances have only been small, owing to the moderate stocks in the hands of importers. In Bleached Goods the transactions have been on about an average scale, and there is no quotable change in prices. Dyed and Printed and Turkey Red Fabrics are unaltered in value, but the sales of the latter description have been larger than for some time back. Twist continues very dull, the dealers showing no disposition to buy except to meet their most immediate requirements. Metals are inactive; copper only being the turn in favour of buyers, other kinds mostly being quoted at a decline.

Exports.—Bombay, March 4.—Cotton: By the telegrams received during the week the Liverpool Cotton Market has throughout been dull and heavy, and on the 2nd of March—the date of our latest telegram—when Fair Dhollerah is quoted at the reduced price of 6¾d., the market is reported to have a declining tendency. The Liverpool Market is in this state in face of the announcement that the preliminaries of peace between France and Germany have been agreed to by the National Assembly. It is clear, therefore, that the effect of peace had already been discounted, and will only be visible in the stimulus which will hereafter be infused into trade, and which will help to counteract the depressing influences of large increasing stocks and dearer money. Although a considerable business has again been done here, prices have given way Rs. 5 to 12 per candy. These are still much too high, but it is gratifying to find that the dealers show less disposition to hold out for high prices, as, with a decline to the level of Liverpool, a large and safe business would be done. The purchases made in Bombay, for export, aggregate about 9,000 candies, among which there were—of New Cotton, 2,050 candies of Dhollera, deliverable in sixty days, at Rs. 183 to 194 per candy; 1,300 candies of Oomrawuttee, at Rs. 175 to 188; 1,400 candies of Akote, at Rs. 182 to 195; 400 candies of Broach, at Rs. 169 to 182; and 1,000 candies of Machine-ginned Broach, at Rs. 197 to 202; and of Old Cotton, 700 candies of Dhollera at Rs. 158 to 187, according to quality; 400 candies Dharwar Sawginned, at Rs. 192 to 195; and 600 candies of Comptah at Rs. 163 to 166.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

Title of Major-General, Staff Corps.

No. 168.—The following military letter from the Right Hon. the Secy of State for India is published for general information:—

Military.—No. 21.

India-office, London, Jan. 19.

To H.E. the Right Hon. the Governor-General of India in Council.

My Lord,—I have considered in Council your lordship's letter, dated the 7th of December last, No. 338, relative to a question raised as to the title of a major-general of the staff corps who, while on the unemployed rate of Rs. 1,295-5, may be placed on special duty of any description, to extra allowances when so employed.

2. The claim preferred by Majors-gen. —— and —— appears to have arisen from a misconception of the meaning of the term "unemployed." It has been laid down that no unemployed general officer of the staff corps, who is not required by the Governments in India to remain there, shall be allowed to receive pay on the Indian scale for a longer period than three years. This rule was intended to comprise all general officers of that corps who may not be holding specific staff appointments, and your lordship very rightly informed the Commander-in-Chief that, while in receipt of Indian allowances, a general officer, like all other unemployed officers, is available for any ordinary duty suitable to his rank, without extra allowance, if no staff or special salary is attached to such duty.

3. With reference to your recommendation that any period during which an unemployed major-general of the staff corps may actually be employed on temporary duty of a special nature should be added to the three years for which the Indian allowances of his grade may be passed to him, I consider it advisable that this period should not be extended, except in the case of officers who may, in the course of it, be nominated to some bona fide staff appointment, either of a permanent or temporary nature.—I have, &c.,

Argyll.

SOCIETY OF ARTS.—AN "ORIENTAL CONGRESS," IN ENGLAND.

A conference of the "East India Committee" of the Society of Arts took place on Wednesday evening (Mr. John Cheetham in the chair), at which Mr. Hyde Clarke laid before the meeting proposals for establishing in England an "Oriental Congress," or a kind of travelling institution to supplement such societies as the "British Association for the Advancement of Science," and the "Social Science Association;" but the "Oriental Congress" to be itself distinct in character, and deal solely with matters concerning India and our Eastern possessions. The lecturer began by maintaining that a Congress would be likely to prove the best means of awakening the public mind to the extent of the undeveloped or insufficiently developed resources of India, concerning which and the Government of India there appeared to be so little interest felt either by Parliament or the British nation. It was a curious fact that while in the great metropolis of London politicians and publicists were apathetic in regard to the government and future welfare of India, in the provinces, at large manufacturing towns, such as Manchester, the prosperity of India was viewed with the most active sympathies and the strongest desire to introduce reforms and develop the resources of the country. It was proposed that, adopting the system of the British Association, the "Oriental Congress" should, as stated, be a travelling body, and visit once a year successively the large towns of the provinces, commencing with Manchester, for instance, and taking in due course for its future sittings those centres of manufacturing industry and commerce whose trading interests were associated with those of India.

At the provincial meetings of the "Oriental Congress" subjects would be discussed suitable to the wants and requirements, as regarded India, of the particular manufacturing towns visited. The business of the Congress would be to ascertain in what way intercommunication between those towns and India could be facilitated and extended. The educational system of the "Oriental Congress" would embrace the delivery of lectures, and the reading and consideration of papers treating of all branches of knowledge calculated to throw a light upon the material resources of India, and her capacities for the reception of political and social improvement. The papers read would show how the vast and splendid capabilities of our Oriental dominions might be more readily elicited by scientific investigation and commercial activity. The natural history of India would form a leading subject of inquiry and discussion for the purpose of reducing it to practical adaptations beneficial to trade and commerce. Excluding politics (except indirectly) and religion, the sections of the "Oriental Congress" would deal with questions of Economical Science in regard to India. Thus the Geological section would take up the subject of mining resources and metallurgy of India. There would be an Agricultural section, which would consider questions connected with the development of the products of the soil and the protection of agricultural labour. A Biological section, under which medical subjects would come under consideration with a view to sanitary improvements. A Philological section would deal with the Oriental Languages and Literature, and so on. In concluding his address, the speaker expressed the hope that the propositions he had laid before the society would meet with their favourable consideration, and that an "Oriental Congress" or some similar institution would be adopted for the benefit of India.

Mr. Quaritch (Oriental bookseller) rose to express his approval of that part of the programme which promised a section for Oriental literature. As a person connected for many years with the dissemination of Oriental literature, he saw the advantage to be derived from the encouragement of the study of the languages of India. However, his moral courage sank when he reflected on the apathy manifested by politicians and social reformers in respect to India. It was strange that this should be so, because a much wider intercourse had taken place with the country under the Imperial rule than occurred under that of the East India Company. The East India Company's rule had been a system of middle-class administration, but it possessed merits of its own. The youths of middle-class families, who under the old regime filled the services, civil and military, received a form of political and judicial education which rendered them able men for official employment on their return home. But since 1857, the time of the Mutiny, and the subsequent abolition of the East India Company in 1858, the administrative system in India had, he considered, retrograded; and although the present generation of civilians and officers no doubt performed their duties as conscientiously as any previous generation of officials, still he thought there was not now the same amount of interest felt in the social condition of the people as before. At home the interest in Indian affairs was still less. One of the principal means of facilitating the general prosperity and social advance of the natives of India was, the speaker considered, the encouragement of the study of the native languages. Our acquaintance with the Institutions of the country extended with our knowledge of its languages. Had not the famous oriental scholar, Sir William Jones, opened the way to a knowledge of the colloquial languages by his discoveries of the connection between the Sanscrit and the Vernacular languages—had it not been for the philological studies of other eminent orientalists, the results of which were preserved in the Asiatic Researches, the Bengal Journal, and other repositories of oriental literature, our knowledge of the people of India, their religion, history, &c., would have been still in a retarded state. The importance of the encouragement of the study of the languages he could not too strongly urge; as of course such knowledge would greatly assist in aiding us in the future civilisation of the natives of India. The remainder of the discussion dealt with those leading questions connected with the internal condition of India, finance, revenue, expenditure, public works, land tenure, &c., in which Messrs. Fitzwilliam, Maitland, Naoroji and other members of the Conference took part.

The Hon. Chairman concluded an able speech by proposing a vote of thanks to Mr. Hyde Clarke for his valuable paper, which was seconded by Mr. Fitzwilliam, and unanimously carried.

A conversation ensued, originated by Mr. Dadabhai Naoroji, and participated in by Mr. Ashworth, Mr. Fitzwilliam, and other members, and the whole discussion was wound up by an elaborate reply from the opener of the question, who professed his perfect readiness to adopt many of the valuable suggestions made. He stated that he had already received a large amount of support from private individuals, for the Congress, which was encouragement enough to induce him to go on. It was gratifying to have the support of Mr. Quaritch, the Orientalist, and also of so able an Indian reformer as Mr. Naoroji. The wish had been expressed by more than one member that the "Oriental Congress" should be associated with the British Association, or the Social Science Association. But he believed that the Congress would best carry out its purpose by being an independent body. He proposed then, first to go to the Society of Arts with his plans, and placing the influential recommendations and support they had already received before the Society say, will you take the "Oriental Congress" upon its independent basis and merits, or will you allow it to be merged in the British Association, Social Science, or the East India Association? He concluded by stating his conviction that the "Oriental Congress," through the influential support it had received, was destined to be soon established.

Miscellaneous.

Sir John Macleod, K.C.S.I., of the Indian Law Commission, has been raised to the dignity of a Privy Councillor. He was sworn in on Friday at a Court held at Windsor, and took his place at the Board.

ARMY PURCHASE.—It is rumoured that the Commissioners to be appointed under the Army Regulation Bill for the purpose of carrying out the Purchase System, if the measure passes, will be Lieut.-General Baron Sandhurst and Major-General Sir H. Storks, with Mr. O'Dowd, the Deputy Judge Advocate-General as legal adviser, and Mr. Samuel Osborne, of the War-office, as secretary.—Broad Arrow.

PRESENT TO PRINCESS LOUISE.—His Highness the Maharajah Duleep Singh's gift was a very fine specimen of a Lahore pendant, with thirteen large emerald drops, and composed of Indian basque diamonds, from the collection of the renowned Runjeet Singh, once the mighty ruler of the Punjab. It was arranged with much taste by Messrs. London and Ryder, with a massive gold chain, and enclosed in a white velvet casket bearing the coronet and letter L.

THE SUEZ CANAL.—A summary of the entire traffic through the Suez Canal from the inauguration in November, 1869, to the end of last year, has been published by Messrs. Cory Brothers and Co., as agents for the compilers, Messrs. C. and A. Bazin, of Port Said, Suez, and Ismailia. The tables give the name and full particulars of every vessel that has entered the canal during that period. A supplementary pamphlet gives similar particulars for the month of January last.

APPEALS FROM INDIA.—A private Committee of the Indian Council has, we understand, been sitting for some days in one of the retired rooms of the office, to examine witnesses on the subject of prohibiting appeals from India on questions of fact. Three barristers who have had long experience in India, Messrs. Leith, Bell, and Doyne, have already submitted their brains to be picked, and we can have little doubt that their evidence has shown the Committee the unreasonableness of the proposed measure, unless it be a foregone conclusion.—Asiatic.

THE REALM MARINE INSURANCE COMPANY.—A prospectus has appeared of the Realm Marine Insurance Company, requiring a capital of £800,000, half of which, in shares of £20 each, is to form the first issue. The promoters point out that the completion of the Suez Canal, and the establishment of telegraphic communication with the East, have powerfully stimulated trade with India, China, Japan and Australia. The present company is intended to supply additional facilities for effecting marine insurances with those countries.

THE NON-PURCHASE REGIMENTS OF THE LINE.—We observe with regret that the same evil influence which has prevented justice being done to Indian officers has been at work in framing the Government Army Regulation Bill, paragraph four of Clause one of which does not recognise the right of officers in the three new cavalry and nine new infantry regiments to be compensated for loss of bonus, except upon the conditions laid down in Lord Cranborne's despatch. We believe the officers of these regiments now at home are exerting themselves to get this clause altered, several members are prepared to support their claims, and notice is to be given of an amendment which will provide that on retiring from either of these regiments an officer shall receive the amount his juniors would have subscribed. We hope the officers in England will use all the influence they possess to secure justice for themselves and their brothers-in-arms, who are prevented, by reason of their absence from this country, advocating their rights.—Home News.

EARLIEST INDIAN CIVILISATION.—On Monday week Mr. Hyde Clarke read a paper before the Anthropological Institute, giving a sketch of his discoveries in the unsuspected epoch of civilisation between 3,500 and 4,500 years ago. From a great mass of facts, and by the application of the spoken languages of the Caucasus, he demonstrated that in India a language, termed by him Palæogeorgian, was used at the epoch referred to, though now the only affinities, and that distant, are to be found among the Himalayan tribes and those of Thibet. The geographical names in the classic authorities for India and the coast, as far as the Malay peninsula and including Ceylon, were Palæogeorgian. To the populations speaking these languages, but denominated Caucaso-Thibetan, an origin from High Asia was assigned, because the affinities, as defined by Mr. B. H. Hodgson and himself, were with the Thibetan group, and consequently the extension of empire to the West must have been from India itself. Thus was obtained the first authenticated example of the diffusion of the elements of civilisation and the community of ideas from India to the West. The migration would include that of the Khasias and builders of stone monuments. The areas of empire, language, comparative mythology, and monuments, covered each other; and, though the northern bounds cannot yet be defined, yet, passing through Persia, the region embraced the countries to the Caspian and Caucasus, Syria and the Holy Land, Asia Minor, Greece, Italy, Spain, Gaul, and Britain, and possibly Mauritania; and the extent of geographical area covered, and of geographical knowledge obtained, at this remote epoch, surpassed that of the Greeks and the Romans. The language was shown to be in an archaic state long antecedent to the development of the present Sanskrit and Semitic tongues, and illustrative as well of the development of those languages as of the climate, and available for the decipherment of the earliest cuneiform of the Etruscan and the unsolved languages of Asia Minor. Considerable light was thrown upon the biblical records, and on many branches of learning.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, TUESDAY, March 21.—THE SON OF KING THEODORE.—Sir J. HAY asked how the sum of £856 for educating the son of the late King Theodore was arrived at, and contrasted this liberality with the refusal of the Government to vote a single farthing to show proper respect to Prince Kassa, to whose friendship the success of our expedition to Abyssinia was very greatly owing. Prince Kassa entertained our envoys, protected our communications, and provided supplies of food for our troops. He now wished to visit England, and, like an Eastern Prince, desired to be received here with hospitality becoming his rank; that, however, was entirely declined.—Colonel SYKES confirmed what had just been said of the importance of Prince Kassa's services to the Abyssinian Expedition, and stated that that Prince wished to send two envoys to this country with a letter and a present to the Queen. The envoys had been detained in Egypt since last October, and they were told that they might send the present, but that they could not come themselves, for we could not make them our guests. The Prince was willing to give free grants of land to European emigrants in his country for the cultivation of cotton, sugar, and indigo.—Mr. RYLANDS could not concur in the view taken by the last speaker. After the costly and painful experience we had lately had, he thought we had every reason to look with great caution upon anything which might entangle us in transactions with Abyssinian potentates and princes. It was very undesirable that the Government should in any way recognise those Abyssinian envoys, or should hold out the least inducement to Europeans to settle in those barbarous countries, except entirely at their own risk.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, THURSDAY, March 23.—THE ARMY REGULATION BILL.—Mr. MUNDELLA moved—"That this House, while approving the abolition of purchase in the army, is of opinion that the army may be put in a state of efficiency without increasing the ordinary Military Estimates of last year." In a comprehensive speech, dealing with almost every branch of military organisation, Mr. Mundella argued that what was wanted for the army was not enlarged expenditure but more efficient organisation. He enumerated a number of things—such as honorary colonelcies, army agents, privileged corps, &c.—in which economies might be effected; approved the abolition of purchase and short service, adding that his experience on a Royal Commission now sitting convinced him that a celibate army of men from twenty-five to forty years of age could never exist without being a curse both to itself and to the population; and suggested that the number of men in the army might be largely increased at a very small cost if drill were accommodated to the exigencies of civil life. He recommended the formation not only of a militia but a volunteer reserve. His arguments were summed up in a quotation from Lowell:—

> "More men?" More man—that's where we fail;
> Weak things grow weaker yet by lengthening.
> What is the use of adding to the tail
> When it's the head's in want of strengthening?

He referred to the assertion of the Pall Mall Gazette that the Horse Guards took a positive delight in keeping bad characters in the army, and said he had collected information fully corroborating that statement. Take back your estimates, he said to the Government; revise them, and give us a better organisation.—The resolution was supported by Mr. PEASE, Mr. DIXON, Mr. JACOB BRIGHT, Mr. CANDLISH, and Mr. HOLMS.—Mr. BRIGHT entreated the Government not to yield to the pressure of an expenditure party, who had their own ends to serve in squeezing taxes from the country; and warned them of the growing feeling, which the present estimates would confirm, that extravagant expenditure was inseparable from a monarchical and aristocratic system, and must therefore be checked by a change in our institutions. The character of the Government was a better protection than bloated armaments. An able Government would seldom get the country into difficulties, and if they did, they would have ability enough to extricate it without resorting to the barbarous and criminal practice of war.—Mr. CANDLISH pointed out that these estimates condemned the previous policy of the Government; for, if we wanted this increased armament now when France and Germany were utterly exhausted, it must have been much more necessary when the struggle was going on, and when we might have been called upon to interfere. Mr. Holms calculated that we ought to get an army of 160,000 men for £10,000,000 at the outside.—Mr. GLADSTONE and Mr. CARDWELL declined to avail themselves of Mr. Mundella's invitation "to take back their estimates." The defensive expenditure of the country, Mr. Gladstone argued, must be taken as a whole, including the navy as well as the army, and, thus viewed, it would be found that the present estimates were less by some £600,000 or £800,000 than the expenditure of 1868. Moreover, these estimates did not represent the normal measure of military expenditure; they were, in fact, transition estimates—having reference to two great causes. The first of these causes was the state of the world and the conditions existing as to peace or war upon the Continent; the second cause was the necessity and the strong desire on the part of the country for an extensive change of its military system. The military establishments of the country could not be limited, positively and rigidly, to what was required for the defence of its shores. Our duties extended beyond the limit of our territories, and we were not prepared, absolutely and irrespective of circumstances which might arise, to withdraw from a position in which we might be called on to perform duties over and above what pertained to the immediate safety of the country. He must be a very sanguine man who supposed that because the preliminaries of peace were signed the peace of Europe therefore was to be considered as without a cloud. Analysing the increased expenditure of the year, Mr. Gladstone showed that about a third was for the augmentation of our regular forces, a sixth for the auxiliary forces, and the rest mainly for arms, stores, and works, being an outlay of a temporary and occasional character. Referring to a remark of Mr. Mundella's as to the Duke of Cambridge, he said very pointedly that in all their military plans and measures the Executive Government would insist upon the energetic co-operation, not merely the passive neutrality, of the military chiefs of the army.—Mr. Cardwell, in a few brief remarks, denied that the Government had yielded to the influence of panic. It was to short service that the Government looked as the future means of securing both efficiency and economy. They had directed the military authorities, when the numbers of the regiments were full, or nearly so, as they were now, to offer admission to the Reserve to meritorious and well-conducted men who might be willing to enter that force. These men would still be borne on the books of the regiments, so that it would not, perhaps, be necessary, looking at the state of Europe, to fill up their places in the regiments. Having abolished the bounty, they had taken measures for expediting the removal of bad characters from the service.—General Herbert, and Sir H. Hoare spoke against the resolution, which, on a division, was rejected by 294 to 91.—After some remarks from Lord Garlies (who predicted the disorganisation of the army from the plans of the Government) the House went into Committee of Supply.—On the vote of 135,047 men, including 6,385 men for deposits in the United Kingdom of regiments in India, Mr. Leatham moved that the number of men be reduced by 20,000.—This was resisted by Mr. Cardwell, and defeated by 304 to 74 votes.—A proposal by Mr. Lea to cancel the item of £37,231 for army agents was rejected by 160 to 87, Mr. Cardwell explaining that the sum had already been reduced, and on the abolition of purchase would doubtless disappear altogether.—Sir C. Dilke moved that £17,850 should be struck our of the regimental pay, being the estimated difference between the cost of two regiments of Household Cavalry and the same number of Cavalry of the Line; the substitution of useful for decorative cavalry would, he contended, effect a great saving.—Mr. Cardwell and Captain Talbot opposed the motion, and Sir C. Dilke was beaten by 108 to 51.

House of Commons, Friday, March 24.—Strength of the Army.—On the Report of Supply, Lord Elcho moved to reduce the number of men for the land forces (135,000) by 10,000 men. After explaining at some length his views on military affairs he attacked the statement of the Prime Minister that our panics were discreditable to the national character. They were discreditable solely to the Government which had lavished such frightful sums upon our military armaments with results so inadequate.—Mr. Cardwell defended the proposals of the Government, especially in regard to Artillery, against the strictures of Lord Elcho, and condemned his rival plan as neither economical nor efficient.—Mr. Muntz said that our Army had cost during the last fifteen years £220,000,000, and yet when the late war broke out it was agreed that the country was almost defenceless. Until we had organisation at the War-office, panics, which were not got up at the clubs, but represented the instinctive terror of those who felt themselves defenceless, would continue.—Sir H. Storks adduced figures to show that our peace establishment was of adequate strength and efficiency, and that the War-office had not been so negligent as their "candid friend" Lord Elcho would have the House to believe.—Lord Elcho's amendment was then negatived without a division, and the report was received.

Indian Railways.—In reply to Mr. Waterhouse, Mr. Grant Duff said that only 645 miles of railway in India had been opened instead of 800 miles, which Lord Mayo had hoped would be completed within twelve months; but, as the year had not closed, it was still possible that the Viceroy's hope would be realised. The Indian Government were pushing on the works with great energy.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, March 11; Agra, March 9; Calcutta and Madras, March 8.

MR. EDGAR'S safe arrival at Monierkhall on the 27th February was reported from Cachar, at which place his presence was hourly expected on the 28th. On the 27th Captain Robertson with twenty men of the 44th N. I. and fifteen police had a skirmish with the Loshais near Alinuggur, one of the frontier outposts. The savages had attacked a hill village, but were beaten off by Capt. Robertson with some loss, including at least one dead body, which the troops carried back with them; it being Captain Robertson's purpose to have it photographed, in order, as he was in hopes, of identifying the man's tribe. Several guns and daos (knives) were also captured. Mr. Edgar is said to have expressed a belief that the raid on Katlicherra was made by the Howlong Loshais, and those on other tea-gardens by the sons of a chief who lives to the south of Manipore. The Friend of India, on the contrary, deems it no longer possible to doubt that Sookpilall has been "at the bottom of the mischief." This seems strengthened by Captain Robertson's latest despatch of March 4 from Alinuggur, announcing the retreat of the raiders in two opposite directions eastward, the finding of two more bodies in the jungle, the starting of Captain Butler in pursuit, and the fact of one of the leaders having been recognised by the hill people as a son of Sookpilall. This may of course prove to be a mistake of theirs, but present appearances look ill for that chief's asserted loyalty. There is still some hope of recovering Mr. Winchester's little girl, whose captors will perhaps prefer keeping her as a hostage to offering her up, like their native prisoners, in sacrifice to their gods. According to the latest news from Chittagong, large bodies of savages were seen on the Tipperah hills, about thirty miles east of Commillah, in the beginning of March.

ON the 3rd March the right wing of the 22nd N.I. was ordered off at short notice from Calcutta to Dacca, to replace the troops sent on from Dacca to the frontier. Lord Napier is said to have accepted the need of deferring active operations against the Loshais to a more favourable season. Meanwhile, the Cachar force is to be fully strengthened against the chance of any further inroads. Not content with the prospect of such protection as the Government may hold out to them, the tea-planters of Cacher have resolved to organise among themselves a volunteer corps armed with breechloaders.

IN pursuing the Katlicherra raiders, Mr. Metcalfe's party found the track strewn with old iron and other remnants of the plunder taken; among the latter, Mr. Winchester's Bible and the torn pieces of a hundred rupee note. Further on were the headless bodies of three men tied to trees. Three days' march along the hills brought them to a large space that had evidently been cleared and used as a camp. From the tops of some trees which had been notched for climbing purposes, the whole Hailakandy Valley lay spread out like a large map. A strong guard was finally left at the top of this range.

THE unpleasant story quoted in our last issue touching the mutinous conduct of the 19th Madras Sepoys turns out to be apparently but too well grounded. The accounts received by the last mail confirm with fresh particulars the fact of that regiment having refused to take their pay on embarking for Singapore unless they should receive an advance of three months instead of two. The ringleaders who had severally refused to take the proffered pay were arrested, but eventually the regiment got all for which they had contended. One thing however was wanting to their triumph, and it was not wanting long. When the order to march off was given, they refused to leave the parade-ground until their imprisoned comrades were released. On this point also their success was complete. The prisoners were released and the whole regiment quietly returned to their duty. If this tale be true to the letter, some person or persons must have greatly blundered. If the sepoys had a real grievance at the outset, it is a pity that no one knew of it at the right moment. If it was found expedient to satisfy their original demands, why were those who first announced them still kept in arrest? If there was reason for such a course after the first concession, why were these men afterwards released in compliance with the further demands of their mutinous comrades? In view of conduct so hard to explain, we would fain hope that the story in its present shape may yet be found to need revising.

SIR R. TEMPLE'S Budget Speech, as delivered on March 9, attests according to the Times of India his undoubted faculty for clear exposition. But the same critic declines to credit him with any share in producing the surplus he was able to show. It was the opium returns which alone saved him from another deficit. Sir Richard had overestimated the yield of his income-tax by several hundred thousand pounds. The same journal points to the great increase in the cash balances as proving the needlessness for an augmented income-tax which brought in only a million after all. It even goes the length of hinting that desperate efforts have been made to "keep down the surplus."

WE need not give again the main figures of Sir Richard's Budget. We may add here however that the probable Cash Balances at the end of March would amount to more than sixteen millions, and those for the same month of next year to over fifteen millions. Measures are also in hand for establishing district savings' banks, issuing five rupee notes, and coining five and ten rupee gold pieces. Bills for new local taxes have been passed in Madras, introduced for the North-West, Oudh, and the Punjab, and discussed in Bombay and Bengal.

The warm debate in the Calcutta Council Chamber on Sir R. Temple's proposal to maintain a reduced income-tax of one per cent. on incomes above £75 a-year, has ended, according to a Calcutta telegram of March 28, in the passing of a Bill to levy a one-per-cent. tax "for the current financial year only." This at first sight might be taken as a sort of pledge to remit the tax altogether at the year's end, but without further information it would be rash to jump to so agreeable a conclusion. At any rate it does not of necessity follow that no income-tax will be levied next year because the present Act runs for one year only.

As soon as the debate on the Budget was over, it was expected that the Viceroy would leave Calcutta on his way towards Simlah, halting for a time at Lucknow and some other places.

The Returns of Traffic through the Suez Canal from its opening to the end of January last, as now set forth by Messrs. Bazin, show how steadily the traffic is increasing, and how large a proportion of it is due to English enterprise. The true starting-point was the 24th November, 1869, when two French steamers of 1,000 tons each passed into the Canal. By the end of November there had passed through six steamers and four sailing ships, averaging 600 tons each, of which six were French, and only one British; an Austrian, a Dutch, and a Portuguese ship making up the balance. In December however England turns the tables with seven steamers against one French; Prussia Holland, Spain, and Turkey adding one a-piece to make up the twelve that passed through. In January 1870 England sent out twelve and France three of the sixteen steamers that made up the total for that month. Ten of the English were merchant-ships measuring altogether 6,855 tons, or about two-thirds of the entire tonnage for January. In February out of a total of twenty-five ships measuring 16,587 tons, England contributed thirteen vessels and 11,344 tons, against four French ships, making up 1,383 tons. Of the English proportion all but a thousand tons are set down to merchant-vessels; the balance belonging to a Government-steamer. Of the forty-seven ships that passed through in March thirty-four were British and five French, all merchant-steamers, with a tonnage respectively of 30,098 and 4,872. In April the total declined to forty vessels, of which twenty-four were British and six French, Egypt furnishing five of the remainder. In May it rose to forty-four, and in June to fifty-one ships, of which England furnished thirty and thirty-four, and France nine and eight. During the rest of the year the traffic fluctuated, falling in September to thirty-two vessels and rising in December to seventy-three. But from month to month England invariably keeps the great lead she took almost from the beginning. It is not till November that the war seems to tell against the French traffic, when the number of French ships fell to five against thirty English; the numbers in December being respectively five and thirty-nine. With November begins the growth of Austrian traffic; five Austrian ships passing through in that month and seven in December. Egypt claims the next place for mercantile tonnage, while Italy cuts a poorer figure than Turkey. The ships of other Powers are nowhere. Altogether 448 merchant ships, measuring 409,312 tons, passed through the Canal in 1870. Out of this total 285,188 tons, made up by about 300 vessels, represent England's share in the Canal traffic. For the first month of the new year England again leads off with forty ships, of which thirty-five represent a mercantile tonnage of 35,315. Austria comes next with fourteen vessels, including one Government steamer, France third with only half that number, Turkey next with four, while Italy and Egypt contribute three a-piece, towards a total of seventy-four for the whole month. The English tonnage is about four times that of Austria and six times that of France.

As a rule the time taken in the passage appears to be from thirty to thirty-six hours. In some cases however the voyage has been completed some hours sooner. It is seldom that ships even of the heaviest tonnage suitable to the Canal have spent more than two days in the passage, while some vessels drawing more than twenty feet of water have passed through in a day and a-half. Most of the vessels seem to carry general cargoes; but in the summer and autumn months we come now and then upon a cargo of tea or cotton. The chief employment of Egyptian and Turkish vessels is apparently to carry troops or pilgrims, or to take in ballast for short voyages. Last January nine English ships carried from ten to one hundred and twenty passengers each through the Canal. Two French ships carried between them one hundred and sixty-six passengers. Several of the Austrian ships were laden with coal from Cardiff for Suez, and one took troops for the Turkish Government from Constantinople to Jeddah. Nearly all the English vessels seem to ply between this country and some port in the Far East between Aden and Hong Kong; Calcutta and Bombay being the most frequented of such ports. At its present rate of increase the traffic by the Suez Canal may yet offer a handsome profit, if not to the original shareholders, at any rate to their more fortunate successors. From all we hear the Canal has been materially improved already. Its sharper turns and corners have been rounded off, the sidings multiplied, and the bottom deepened so uniformly that ships of almost any draught can now pass through it with comparative ease. It also appears to be quite wide enough for all the traffic it is likely to draw for many years to come.

Sir James Elphinstone seems determined to keep before the public eye his favourite scheme of an artificial channel for ships of large burden between the Madras coast and Ceylon. Baffled by the India-Office, he has enlisted the East India Association on his side. At a meeting of that body on the 28th ultimo, Sir James spoke at some length before an approving audience, brought together under the chairmanship of Mr. E. B. Eastwick, M.P. Ever since 1842, when he commanded a vessel in the Indian Navy, his mind had been directed, he said, to the expediency of cutting a navigable channel through the rocks and sandbanks that help to form Adam's Bridge. Looking at the great subsequent increase in the trade of Ceylon and the present state of the passenger traffic, he asked for a channel better suited to the ships of our day than the present crooked makeshift, through whose snaky windings a ship of any length cannot pass. His plan is to cut through a few hundred yards of sandbank and about two miles of the long thin tongue of land that stretches out from the Madras coast to meet the rocks of Adam's Bridge. This would give access to a harbour of sixteen square miles, with an anchorage of twenty-four to thirty-six feet, and would secure a saving of 750 miles on the double journey, equivalent to about four per cent. on ship expenses. The whole work could be done for £90,000, and the channel kept clear at a small annual cost. Sir Arthur Cotton bore witness to the feasibility and the great usefulness of a scheme which, according to another speaker, Mr. Smith, M.P., would soon reimburse the Government whatever sum it might be induced to lend. Sir J. D. Hay, M.P., who like Mr. Smith and Sir J. Elphinstone had served on the Committee of 1862, pointed to the present scheme as removing the last obstacles to the attainment of an end which nearly the whole Committee had pronounced desirable. After Sir T. Bazley and some others had spoken to the same effect, the meeting resolved to bring the question before the Chambers of Commerce and the Government of this country. It certainly seems a pity that a project so strongly recommended should fall through for want of a hundred thousand pounds, and therefore we are glad to hear that with or without Government aid the money for the work will be forthcoming at the right moment.

Sir Bartle Frere, not Mr. R. Mangles, was the first who gave evidence before the select committee on Indian Finance. On Tuesday last however Mr. Mangles was called up, and gave some important evidence touching the Permanent Settlement and the loss it had really entailed on the Indian Revenues.

The result of the University Boat Race on Saturday was telegraphed to Bombay at 10.39 A.M., six minutes after the race was over. According to the reports of the two telegraph companies the message reached Bombay at 10.44 A.M. This, we presume means English time, and if so it is certainly wonderful.

PENNY WISE, AND POUND FOOLISH.

Lord Mayo's attempts at economy have been, in some instances, so ill-directed as to create a strong feeling of distrust at his ability to deal with matters of grave importance to our Indian Empire. While wasting hours over warm discussions as to the number of chuprassies and dufturies to be retained on the establishment of each office, thousands of pounds are recklessly squandered in litigation. In our last number appeared, on the authority of the Central India Times, a paragraph to the effect that a well-known European firm had decided to institute proceedings against Government in the Civil Court of Nagpore for forcible dispossession of land, for which nothing equivalent to its value had been offered. This is by no means the first case of the kind. The non-regulation provinces are proverbial for executive mismanagement and consequent heavy damages. In Gazipore, a house belonging to a well-known Colonel being required for public purposes, the collector refused to pay for it more than about half its actual value. The proprietor therefore demanded that the case be submitted to arbitration under Act VI. of 1857. That was done, and the arbitrators awarded Rs. 7,000 in excess of the owner's claim. In Delhi the arbitrators in one case obliged the Punjab Government to pay Rs. 52,000 for property which it might have had for Rs. 30,000, and in another Rs. 82,700, being Rs. 2,700 in excess of the value at which the owner estimated it, and Rs. 55,700 in excess of the sum which the Government offered to pay. In a third case, a native banker of Delhi claimed Rs. 75,000 from the Government (who, as having succeeded to the property of the ex-King of Delhi, had become liable for his lawful debts), and was forced into Court, when a compromise might have been effected for half the sum. The result was that the claimant, being eventually driven to appeal to her Majesty's Privy Council, obtained a verdict, with interest at 12 per cent. per annum up to date, amounting in all to Rs. 110,000. In a fourth case, a member of the ex-Royal family of Delhi obtained a large sum as compensation for losses sustained, on the ground of active loyalty rendered, and special directions from Lord Canning that he be paid, by way of reward, a sum exceeding his losses. Notwithstanding these things, the Punjab Government gave him Rs. 35,000, and positively refused to give him any more. Lord Canning, for some reason not stated, declined, when applied to, to insist on obedience to his order. The applicant, as a last resource, appealed to Sir Charles Wood, then Secretary of State, and obtained Rs. 114,000. Sir Charles decided that the Government could not with honour withdraw from the liability which Lord Canning had accepted on its behalf. And those things occurred in a single province after the Mutiny. How the moneys paid were accounted for in the financial budget we have not heard.

THE FAMINE IN RAJPOOTANA.

The official story of the famine which desolated Central India in 1868-9 has at length been told in the Gazette of India, and a woful story it is. Over a hundred thousand square miles of Rajpootana the suffering was unusually intense, even for a region peculiarly liable to such calamities. Nothing like it had been witnessed there since the terrible days of 1812, and in point of intensity it nearly equalled the suffering caused by the famine of 1661, when three-fourths of the cattle perished and men were driven to feed upon each other. Among recent famines this of Rajpootana will bear comparison with the Orissa famine of 1866, and was probably more fatal to human life than the famine of 1861 in the North-West Provinces. What with the consequences of a scanty rainfall, the ravage done by the locusts that ate up the poor remainder of the crops which the drought had spared, and the fatal after-crop of cholera and fever raging among the starved and destitute survivors, it is reckoned that Rajpootana lost a million and a quarter out of its nine million inhabitants by death alone, while from Marwar alone about a million people are said to have emigrated with more than two million head of cattle. Owing to the difficulty of obtaining trustworthy returns from the Native States which suffered most from the calamity, an accurate reckoning for the whole area is out of the question; but the figures given in the Report are probably within the mark. The deaths from cholera and fever alone are set down at one fifth of the population in the suffering districts, and even at one-third in some parts of Marwar.

It may well be supposed that the officers of the Indian Government, under the leading of so able and zealous a head as Colonel Keatinge, did all they could to alleviate the misery they could not prevent. Had the whole of the country in question been directly governed by British agency, the sum of unavoidable suffering might have been greatly reduced, by means like those which saved many a life in our own district of Ajmere. In that district containing four hundred and twenty-six thousand people as much as £152,000 was spent by Government on relief-works and almsgiving; a sum equal to nearly three years' gross revenue for that province. Due praise however has been bestowed by the Indian Government on the way in which English example was emulated by some of the Native Princes. The Maharajah of Jaipore sustained his character for enlightened views by disbursing between four and five lakhs of rupees —from £40,000 to £50,000—in relief of his own subjects, and a yet larger outlay may be placed to the credit of Oodipore. Five lakhs however seems little enough for populations thrice and four times as large as that of Ajmere. Possibly this reckoning does not include the loss resulting to a Native Government from the reduction of transport-duties on grain and the remission of land-rents.

Private charity played no humble part in the work of relief. Large sums were contributed by the Marwarrie residents in Bombay; not a few other natives and many Englishmen opened their purses; and one missionary body, the United Presbyterian Mission, which has lately made some way in Rajpootana, employed its best energies and spent much money in efforts to alleviate the general suffering. When all was done however in that direction, it seemed a trifle in comparison with the evils that defied all remedy. The one thing most needful to assuage the curse of famine was wanting to Rajpootana, as it had been to Orissa. Just as in the latter province no ships could unload their cargoes on a coast inaccessible by sea during the monsoon months, so Rajpootana was cut off from the surrounding provinces at a most critical season by the utter failure of forage for the cattle used in drawing or carrying goods over the wretched roads of the country. Grass and "bhoosa" (chopped straw) became dearer even than grain, so that even of the pack-bullocks of the Bunjarrahs very few were left to carry their accustomed burdens. Out of all this evil however some good, let us hope, will come before drought again visits this roadless, waterless, long-neglected country. Had Rajpootana possessed tolerable roads and a proper system of tanks, wells, and canals, the worst of the suffering caused by the drought of 1868 would not have happened. It is very well for the Indian Government to avow its agreement with Colonel Keatinge's remarks on the need of encouraging the construction of tanks and reservoirs wherever the formation of the country admits of such. It is also easy to express a hope that no opportunity will be lost of impressing on Native Governments the value of irrigation works and the importance of keeping those already made in repair. But something more than good words is needed to bring about the desired consummation. Even the promised railway from Agra to Ajmere, however useful as a means of pouring the spare wealth of the Jumna and Ganges valleys into the heart of Rajpootana, will lose much of its special value, unless the Rajpoot princes can be induced to forward the internal welfare of their own States by supplying them with good roads and abundant water. Here however recurs the difficulty we have always to face in dealing with our native feudatories. If they turn a deaf ear to the advice of our political agents, what is to be done? Will the Indian Government put on them such pressure as it can easily do in the interests of their respective peoples as well as of India at large, or will it prefer waiting for that distant period when the Native Princes will have learned to study the true interests of their own subjects?

THE BATTLE OF THE GUAGES.

What is the proper width of guage for the new lines of railway which the Indian Government has undertaken to construct at its own charges? Such was in effect the question submitted last year by the Secretary of State for India to a committee of four, two of whom were civil engineers of long English experience, the others being engineer officers of rank in the Indian service. The labours of the Committee resulted in the sending in of two separate Reports; one signed by Colonels Strachey and Dickens, and Mr. Rendel, the other by Mr. John Fowler alone, who stood out for a broader guage than that selected by the majority. An outside width of three feet and a half had already been advocated by the Indian Government. With regard to the consequent break of guage there is no material difference of opinion between Mr. Fowler and his colleagues. It is allowed to be an evil in countries like England, France, or Germany, where the traffic is great and the distances generally short. In India, on the other hand, where the distances are comparatively great and the traffic small in bulk, the inconvenience and cost of a break of guage count for almost nothing beside the greater cheapness of the narrower guage. Mr. Fowler indeed shrinks from laying down a general principle, but recommends one uniform narrow guage for all lines that pass through thinly peopled country. According to Colonel Strachey's report the worst consequence of a break of guage would be the adding of a third rail to the broad guage lines at an added cost of £500 a mile on ten thousand miles of railway constructed with a guage of two feet nine inches. In short it would represent the difference between a charge of £5,200 and one of £5,700 a mile for a narrow guage extension of the Indus Valley line. Compare that with the £7,000 a mile which the lightest railway with a guage of five and a-half feet would cost, to say nothing of the heavy rails hitherto used at a charge of £9,300 a mile. Nor would even the retention of the old guage avail much in the interests of economy or convenience, if the new rails were made lighter than the old. Either the loads carried on the older lines would have to be diminished, or their transfer at the junctions from one set of waggons to another would be tantamount to a break of guage.

Having discussed this point, Colonel Strachey and his colleagues proceed to argue in favour of a two feet nine inch guage, as "the narrowest which will combine convenience of transport for various kinds of goods and passengers with reasonable speed and with economy and safety in working." No doubt a three feet six inch guage, such as already prevails in Norway, Russia, Queensland, and parts of America, would produce "a thoroughly satisfactory railway;" but for Indian purposes a railway with a guage of two feet nine inches would answer best. On this guage engines might be put strong enough to "draw at a sufficient speed the largest traffic which the lines for which a narrow guage is suitable are likely to carry." The carriages on such a line would be roomy enough both for goods and passengers, nor would this guage involve any risk of unpleasant oscillation or upset from the force of the wind or any other known cause of danger, if an average pace of fifteen miles an hour be not exceeded. The rails used should weigh no more than thirty-six pounds per yard, the weight of those used on the Trondhjem line in Norway. The maximum weight on each of the engine wheels should not exceed three tons. Whether the rails should be made of steel or iron is a question of relative cost; if steel be sensibly dearer than iron, it is better to use iron than to make up for the difference of price by the adoption of a lighter rail. Passenger carriages might be eighteen feet six inches long and six feet wide, with six feet of internal height. These would carry thirty-two third-class passengers in four compartments, or eighteen second-class in three, or six first-class for short journeys only. For long journeys a first-class carriage might be made to carry three passengers, "with luggage and servants, with washing and closet conveniencies." Such carriages would not weigh more than three-and-a-half tons each. No engine should have less than four wheels coupled, with a weight of three tons to each wheel. It would then be able to draw a load of one hundred and twenty tons up an incline of one in five hundred, at the rate of twenty miles an hour. The diameter of the driving-wheel should not exceed three feet. Under these and such like conditions the two feet nine inch guage would meet all the requirements of Indian traffic as well as any broader guage, nor would there be any sensible difference of carrying power between this guage and one of three feet six inches.

So think Colonel Strachey and his two supporters. Such however is not the opinion of Mr. Fowler, whose "personal experience in the actual construction and working of railways of almost every guage from three feet to seven feet inclusive" has led him to fix on a guage of three feet six inches as best suited to the Indian railway of the future. For this guage an engine can be made of perfect proportions, yet light enough to have a pressure of only two tons a wheel; or it can be built so strong as to do two-thirds of the work performed by the most powerful engine on the standard guage. Moreover it is quite a mistake to suppose that the carrying power of a two feet nine inch guage would be equal to that of a three feet six inch guage. The difference in favour of the latter is not to be overlooked in a country where space is needed not only for the comfort of passengers, but also for the carriage of bulky light goods like jute and cotton, and for purposes of military transport. There must be some degree of danger, discomfort, and additional wear and tear in trying to make the narrower guage equal in carrying power to the broader. Nor is it true that the cost of a railway is in proportion to breadth of guage. Heavy railways of whatever guage would necessarily cost more than light ones, the object of each being distinct. But experience shows that no traffic worthy of a locomotive railway is "so light that it cannot be as well and as cheaply conducted on a three feet six inch as on any narrower guage." In India the difference of cost between such a guage and one of two feet nine inches would be about £45 a mile if iron sleepers were used, and £110 with wooden sleepers. All this however would be more than counterpoised by the greater length and cost of the sidings required for the narrower guage. A line is not necessarily cheap because it is narrow; the Festiniog line, for instance, with its one foot eleven and a-quarter inch guage having rails one-fourth heavier than those used in Canada, Queensland, and Norway. For the new Indian railways Mr. Fowler proposes a rail weighing 42 lbs. per yard. Looking to all this and the successful working of the Norwegian lines, Mr. Fowler does not hesitate to affirm that a width of three feet six inches involves no greater outlay on works and rolling-stock than a guage of two feet nine inches, while it is "greatly superior in carrying capacity, convenience, and economical working." We are certainly inclined to agree with Mr. Fowler, and trust that the Indian Government may yet reconsider its conclusions on a point so vital in view of the thousands of miles which railways of the new pattern will have to run. It is certain that the guage proposed by Mr. Fowler would be safe, commodious, and absolutely cheap, but it is not at all certain that the narrower guage would answer two of those conditions, if it even answered the third.

THE BUDGET.

The Bombay Gazette thinks that although the telegraphic summary of the Budget satisfies the craving for news, yet obviously it does not afford very reliable materials for criticism. In the first place, we should be doing injustice to the Budget-maker were we to deal with the bones of his statement without the body of explanatory matter surrounding them ; and in the next place, errors might creep into an estimate of the character of his Budget. We therefore refrain, the more especially as the full report of the financial member's address will reach us in a few hours. But we may note—though without the least gratitude—that Lord Mayo has kept his promise, and has caused the income-tax to be reduced to one per cent. That is only an act of justice; it confers on the Government no claim to credit, for they only take off what ought never to have been imposed. While objecting, in principle, to an income-tax for India, we should never have quarrelled and shall not now quarrel with a one per cent. levy. It is an unjust tax, but injustice to the extent of one per cent. is not unendurable, and we cannot overlook the fact that while nobody but its authors applauded 3½, many excellent and soundly-judging persons do approve of a low income-tax. A "Contented Man" will be glad to see that in his advice to raise the standard of exemption he anticipated the decision of Government. The limit, however, would have been fairer had it been fixed at Rs. 1,000 ; and it would have been only just had those whose incomes exceed the minimum been allowed to deduct that sum from the total of their income. For the rest the names of Lord Mayo and Sir Richard Temple will be permanently associated with the odious levy of 1870-71. They may become famous for other exploits, but they will always be notorious for that. With the reduction of the income-tax to one per cent. we start afresh ; and regarding that proceeding as simply a tardy act of justice, we are quite ready to discuss the Budget as if there had not been a year of extortion.

THE NORTH-WEST CIVILIANS.

The Englishman observes that the North-West Civilians have another grievance. During the past three years every month has brought forth a complaint of some sort or another from them, and no doubt this exceptional state of things is the result of exceptional ill-treatment. Judging from their printed circulars or memorials, and from the letters which from time to time come to us from not undistinguished names in the Service, the North-West Civilian seems to be a man who has made up his mind that he has made a mistake in life. Promises on the part of the State have not been kept, expectations have not been fulfilled, non-regulation provinces which were to have been officered by a fixed proportion of Civilians to military men have been crammed with the proteges of Chief Commissioners, and the boasted pension of £600 a-year after twenty-five years' service turns out, under a professional accountant's analysis, to be practically only £297 per annum, after an average service of twenty-seven years. All this is doubtless rather disheartening, and it is well both for the service and for the public at home that the facts should have been properly set forth. But it is possible to make too much even of a real grievance, and we think the North-West Civilians have said enough about their wrongs for the present. We lately received a circular signed by one of their number, which institutes an elaborate comparison between the average pay of the Civil Service in the different presidencies. The writer starts with the intimation that the Bombay and Madras Civilians are about to send memorials to the Viceroy, representing that they do not obtain their fair share of highly-paid appointments. This, he thinks, might give rise to an impression that the average pay of Civilians in Madras and Bombay is lower than in the Bengal Presidency. Now the fact is just the reverse. Taking the ten first years of the competitive system the writer shows that the average pay of Civilians who had come out between 1855 and 1865 was, during the last five years of that period, Rs. 1,004 a month in Bombay, Rs. 979 in Madras, and only Rs. 762 in Bengal. Of the three Presidencies, therefore, Bengal is clearly the worst off as regards average pay, and of the various provinces which constitute the Bengal Presidency, the Northern ones have the greatest reason to complain. Thus in Lower Bengal the average was Rs. 853 per mensem during these five years ; in the North-West Rs. 703 ; in the Punjab Rs. 693 ; and in Oude Rs. 670. Public servants of exactly the same class and standing received, therefore, on an average Rs. 301 less pay per mensem in the North-West than in the Bombay Presidency, and Rs. 334 a month less in Oude. We do not deny that there is a substantial hardship in this, and we should be sorry to see the Bengal civilians denuded of any of the Government of India appointments which, to a certain extent, make amends for it. It must be rather disheartening for the civilians in the North-West and Punjab to know (as these tables prove) that they cannot expect a higher salary than Rs. 950 a month after ten years' hard work, while officers of their own standing will be drawing Rs. 1,220 in Madras, and Rs. 1,520 in Bombay. Yet the complainants should remember that their period of service is not ten but twenty-five years, and that any statistics which deal only with the first decade of it are altogether inconclusive. In order to prove their case the North-West Civilians must show that their entire service is worse paid than that of other presidencies. Meanwhile these tables will make Government ponder well before it transfers any of the higher appointments now held by officers of the Bengal Presidency to the Bombay and Madras services. So far the North-West Civilians have had the public sympathy with them, but there is a limit to that sympathy. We all find that our incomes have a smaller purchasing power than they had a few years ago, and officials and non-officials must suffer alike. The service in Lower Bengal has borne its share of hardship, and submitted to the financial necessities with dignified reticence, and we would hint that it is now time for the North-West Civilians to follow its example.

SOMETHING PRACTICAL.

The Friend of India holds that the Zemindar who can be first to make his son an iron-founder or house-builder will be a real benefactor to India. He would touch a spring that would before long make the Empire one vast hive of honourable and honoured industry. Hindoos, we know, can scarcely take up an English book without reading some silliness about "sordid trade," and "gentlemen" as distinguished from workers. Let us settle it that all such talk is silliness, and that the worker may be the truest gentleman. At all events, he is a far higher, because a far more independent man than the one who depends on the favour of great people for his steps upward in life. We know the objection to all this. Caste is against it. But how men at this moment have come to the conclusion that caste shall not stand in the way of the reasonable improvement of India? In this direction would be a reform almost greater, we think, than any other. The pride of work! Let us remember, too, that trade, though it may sometimes have laughed at merely fancied honour, though it may indeed, now and then, have laughed at real honour, as between nation and nation, has been a great steadying principle when firebrands and visionaries would have urged the breaking up of an old system and the beginning of a new one. The Governor General of India could not be more opposed to Wahabeeism than the man who is carrying on great productive works. The through railway from Calcutta to Madras is a grand poem the music of which will be heard in India for ages. Perhaps these words may meet the eye of some young native of India and induce him to think about his future in life; to eschew the bar, to put his B.A. degree on the top shelf of his library, (if the bauble is lost never mind) and try like a man for the nobler distinction of doing something during the years of life. We, scribbling these lines, do not profess, do not dream of professing, that we are doing work half as noble as the man who by skill and industry shows how to raise two blades of grain in the place of one. The barrister may or may not be a gentleman. So may the merchant, the shopkeeper, the cultivator, the ryot. It is not in the occupation but in the man. But a daily worker, with education, ought to be a true gentleman, worthy of a place anywhere. We throw out these remarks as we might pull a bow at a venture. They will meet the eye of some young man leaving college and called upon to select his future in life. We point him to a path of self-reliance, of true honour, and we tell him that he may take a course that will redound to his honour in the times to come.

THE DEFENCE OF THE CACHAR FRONTIER.

The Englishman learns that the Commander-in-Chief has determined that the reduction of the Loshais to their senses shall not for a moment be left a matter of doubt or of chance. So far as we can learn, his Lordship has reluctantly made up his mind that immediate retribution is impossible. The rains have already begun to fall, and operations will be impossible. But the retribution is delayed only in order that it may be more certain. Meanwhile, the Cachar force will be so strengthened as to convince even the Loshais of the impolicy of any immediate movements on their part, and with the breaking up of the rains an avenging column will enter their country. The general opinion in Cachar seems to be that these are the only arrangements that at once could have safely been adopted. But while our military operations must thus remain for some months in abeyance, we think that the time has come for Government to state candidly how it permitted its frontier to lapse into so defenceless a condition. The two articles which have appeared in the Observer wholly fail to afford a reasonable explanation. It has for some time been known in Cachar that the local officers have not altogether approved of the policy which they had to carry out, and nothing could be more miserable than the series of breaks down which have attended previous retributive efforts of the Bengal Government among its frontier tribes. The letters which have recently appeared in this paper with regard to the late Loshai expedition exhibit the most contemptible absence of organisation and foresight on the part of the Government which sent out the force. These letters were written by officers of considerable standing and unimpeachable honour; and yet it is impossible to reconcile their statements except by assuming a total incapacity on the part of the central directing power. The authority was so split up that neither the civilians, nor the soldiers, nor the police seem to have had any responsibility for the total failure of the whole. We have, at least, this consolation, that Lord Napier will suffer no such interference with his proper functions, and we may safely trust to him to take measures which will be effective and complete. But assuming that the retributive expedition will now be successful, we would ask Government to state what guarantee it is prepared to give against the recurrence of January's disasters. The Government of Bengal has sold these frontier lands for tea cultivation; it has led English capitalists to invest large sums in factories, gardens, and colonies of imported labourers; and they have a right to demand that it shall take steps to secure the persons and the property which it has thus attracted to its border districts. We have already expressed our indignation at the treatment which this demand met with in 1869 from the Bengal Secretariat. Even if the protection which it granted had been absolute, the tone in which it dealt with the planters' reasonable requests would have been most impolitic. But when, in addition to its insulting and exasperating tone, the Government leaves the whole of Southern Cachar at the mercy of a few hundred native savages, it can look for nothing but deep and sullen resentment on the part of the community, whom it taxes heavily, and to whom it gives neither security of person nor of property in return. Though the Government of India was responsible for the rejection of the offensive measures proposed by the Government of Bengal, it has yet to be shown that the latter is not responsible for the subsequent neglect of defensive measures, to which we must attribute the late disasters.

The Romance of Crime.—Conspicuous in the Central India States among races who have gained their territories by force, and who live intolerant of law—dacoits of the dacoits—are the daring Kunjur clan. When first our Government undertook to crush the predatory tribes of India, the name of the Kunjur dacoits was known and feared from the east coast to the west; but now the narrowing bounds of barbarism have driven them in and in until their exploits are confined in the great States which are massed together in Central India. Robber after robber has been captured and punished, others have turned approvers, but still vigorous is the old lawless spirit—the contempt of law and life. Some years ago a daring leader, Grassiah, led his band into the Sattara district; his right hand had perhaps forgotten its cunning—perhaps there was a traitor in the camp. At all events, Grassiah was captured. To save his life he turned approver, and in that capacity did good service against his people. At last he died. His widow left for her old jungle home, taking with her her children, a little girl and two boys. They were, she said, to be trained up to emulate their father's deeds, and to wipe out the disgrace of his defection. Years after the family were met in the jungle; the lads were growing up into bold, stalwart men—the girl was a fine stately woman of a stern and commanding appearance. They were learning their trade, but at present were "only stealing horses from their pickets." They hoped to be dacoits before long. The mother was dead, but when dying had made the girl promise that she would never marry, but would lead the gang, as did before the famous Tumboleen. Years passed, and again the family were chanced upon. They were now the foremost in crime; one of the boys had been hanged for an atrocious murder, the girl was the queen of the camp. "You shall hear of us in good time," she said, "but do not try to capture us." But meanwhile Oomrao, the young son of the executed dacoit, had fallen in love and married his beautiful cousin Chumbelee, and she had been abducted by Aman, the powerful leader of a hostile gang. The young dacoit was furious; he would turn approver. Aman warned him not to do so, but somehow the young husband escaped from his comrades, rode into the British officer's camp, and laid bare all the secrets of the Kunjurs. They had one and all reverted to dacoity; new gangs had been formed; Grassiah's daughter was their leader; if the British would get him back his handsome wife he would help to exterminate the clan. His offer was taken, the wife was recovered, the gang broken up; some were captured, others fled. Chumbelee, however, refused to stay with her traitor husband, and died soon after. Grassiah's daughter still retains some followers, but the treachery of Oomrao has struck a mortal blow at the daring Kunjur clan.—Pioneer, Feb. 28.

Bengal.

The Maharajah of Putiala started on Friday, March 3, with Lord Mayo and a strong muster of the Tent Club on a pig-sticking expedition into the Kooshtea district. The Sikh chieftain is said to be a good horseman.

What is a Kookie?—We are told that the word "Kookie" merely signifies a jungle man, and that in this sense the word is used on the Chittagong side when speaking of the independent tribes, whether Loshais, Pankoes, Bonjogees, Khoomees, &c. The three principal classes of the Chittagong side—namely, Howlongs, Syloos, and the tribe of Ruttunpooea—are Loshais, but, as "jungle men," are also called Kookies.

The Viceroy.—It was asserted some days ago that the Maharaja Holkar and other chiefs of Central India were already making preparations for the reception of the Viceroy. The Pioneer hardly thinks it, and adds:—"At least all that we can learn of his Excellency's upward route is that he will leave Calcutta in the first week of April, spend a few days at Cawnpore and Lucknow, after which he may possibly proceed to Simla via Delhi, Dehra, and Chukrata."

Lieutenant-Governor, Punjab.—Yesterday the Lieutenant-Governor visited the outpost of Jutta, about which our readers will remember there was so much talk last year. To-day he visits Tank, the scene of the lamentable accident by which his predecessor met his death. Next Tuesday the party will reach Sowaie Nourung Khan, fifteen miles below Bunnoo. At Bunnoo a halt will be made till the 10th. The fort of Bahadoor Kheyl will be reached on the 13th, and on the 16th a halt will be made at Kohat.—Indian Public Opinion, March 3.

Coal in the Central Provinces.—We are told that an unfavourable report has been made of the gas-producing qualities of the coal taken out of the "Mayo" colliery pit after two separate trials at the Bombay Gas Works last month. Mr. Mark Fryar, the mining engineer, is, however, more hopeful of the coal now being excavated from the new Wurora pit, and a trial of it will be made when a sufficiently large quantity has been got ready for transport to Bombay. The coal from this pit is from a seam two hundred feet below the surface, and is considered very pure.—Central India Times, March 4.

Sir W. Grey.—Sir William Grey has resigned the Lieutenant-Governorship of Bengal, but not the Civil Service, and in Saturday's Gazette appeared a notification that he had obtained one year's furlough to Europe from the 1st inst. We believe Sir William Grey has neither intention nor desire to return to this country, but neither had Sir John P. Grant intention or desire to go to Jamaica when he retired. Were Sir William Grey to be offered "Madras" or "Bombay" more unlikely things have happened than his being tempted to accept the offer would be.—Englishman, March 7.

"A Most Convicting Judge."—The Umrita Bazaar Patrika gives the following valedictory salute to Mr. Lawford on his removal to Jessore:—"After eight years Mr. Judge Lawford leaves Jessore unregretted by the inhabitants. As a Judge, he was a most convicting officer; and as a citizen he never shook hands with a Bengalee, or never mixed with the people. He was a stumbling-block to the union of the two races. With his means and opportunities, what a vast deal of good he might have done to Jessore!" Does Mr. Anstey still adhere to his declaration that there is no such thing as public opinion in India?—Indian Daily News.

The State Railway from Indore to Ajmere.—The Pioneer understands that the survey party has commenced work on the State Railway from Indore to Ajmere. On the staff are Mr. Miller, Superintending Engineer, an American engineer of considerable railway experience; Lieutenant Firebrace, R.E., Assistant Consulting Engineer, Railway Department; Lieutenant Dundas, R.E., from the Public Works Secretariat, Calcutta; Captain Downing, from the Topographical Survey; Lieutenant Begbie, R.E., and others. It is said to be settled that the line shall pass through Neemuch, but the decision of the other intermediate points depends upon considerations political as well as engineering.

The State Railway from Nagpore to Raepore.—We are glad to be able to announce that the survey for the best line of the projected State Railway to Raepore from the terminus at Nagpore has commenced—a staff of surveyors having taken the field early this week. The Chief Engineer, Mr. Armstrong, has also gone out to examine the site for a bridge over the Wyn Gunga at Bhundara, which will be the largest engineering work on the line, next to the cuttings and tunnellings that will be necessary at the Ghat Ranges which divide the Chuttesgurh from the Nagpore country. The river Kunhan is to be crossed by the line over the masonry bridge at Kamptheee, which was being built for the road between Nagpore and Jubbulpore, and is now nearly completed. We trust, however, that the determination to commence upon this important commercial line of railway and the spiriting away of Colonel Haig to higher employment in another part of India are not the foreshadowings of any change as to the Godavery river works. Even a temporary suspension of these noble works would be as unwise as it would be wasteful at the present time.—Central India Times, March 4.

LOSHAI SUPERSTITION.—The Bombay Guardian infers that religious fanaticism has something to do with the raid of the Loshais, from the statement made that they offered up several of their captive s in sacrifice to their gods. Many of the hill tribes believe in the efficacy of human sacrifices.

THE JEYPORE CHIEF.—The Maharajah of Jeypore, we learn from the Pioneer, finds that his constitution cannot reconcile itself to the climate of Bengal. He is understood to be very desirous of continuing his attendance at Council until after the delivery of the Budget statement, but it is doubtful whether his state of health will allow him to do so. In any case he will leave for Jeypore within a very few days.

MILITARY.—General Broome, who has been advised to proceed home on medical certificate, is, says the Englishman, reported to be in a very precarious state of health indeed. The "one year more," so often fatal to the old Indian, does not seem to have treated the Controller General of Military Finance better than others.—The many friends of General Broome will be glad to hear, says the Pioneer, that his health has somewhat improved on the journey to Calcutta. He has fortunately had the companionship of one of his sons thus far, and another will, we believe, accompany him to England.

BISHOP MILMAN AND THE RAMAYAN.—The Hindoo Patriot says:—"The Lord Bishop and the missionaries are desirous to Indianise Christianity by introducing the Katha system. Accordingly his Lordship, accompanied by the Rev. Mr. Long, &c., &c., attended a Katha party at Baboo Jaykissen Mookerjea's house at Ooterparah. The exile of Rama was the part selected on the occasion, and the performance, we are informed, made a very favourable impression on the Bishop. We hope we would not be considered irreverent if we said that the Bishop should not venture too far in attempting to Indianise Christianity, for his Lordship might find it transformed into something akin to Hindooism."

THE NEW SANITARIUM.—One hundred men of the Highlanders from Kamptee have this week (says the Central India Times of March 4) been sent by rail to Bunkhere, the nearest railway station in the Narbada Valley, to the proposed sanitarium at Pachmari on the Satpura range of hills, from which place they are to march up the hill some thirty miles, and in conjunction with a hundred men from the European regiment at Sagar commence upon the work of road-making and laying out the ground for a station. We hear also that after Colonel Keatinge has disposed of his provincial Budget business, and returned from a short tour into the Raepore country, he will go up to Pachmari, taking with him the whole of his Civil and Public Works Secretariat Establishments, and remain there till the monsoon set in.

KIDNAPPING COOLIES.—A very ugly circumstance has been brought to light in connection with Jamaica coolie emigration, or something that passes for it, in this country. Chiefly by the efforts of some missionaries at Allahabad a number of native women were recently found confined in a house and ready for emigration to Jamaica, with their consent it was of course alleged; but this the women resolutely deny, and say that they were allured into the house on false pretences without any reference to being carried over the sea. Two or three of the men concerned have been convicted, and sentenced to terms of imprisonment, and Jamaica emigration agents will no doubt be very closely looked after in future. Women coolies are said to have commanded a much higher price than the men, a fact which makes the transaction all the more suspicious.—Friend of India.

HEALTH OF ENGLISH SOLDIERS IN THE PLAINS.—Experience has fully proved that Europeans cannot thrive on the plains of India, the prevailing diseases of which are fevers, hepatitis, cholera, heat apoplexy, dysentery, and diarrhœa. The death rate of British soldiers in Bengal during 1865 was 24·67 per 1,000, and 66·74 per cent. of the deaths were due to the diseases just named; in other words, more than half the mortality was due to an unhealthy or unsuitable climate. The death rate amongst the soldiers' wives during the four years ending with 1863 was 46·5 per 1,000, and amongst the children during the same period it was no less than 90·4 per 1,000. Europeans, being of the nature of exotics to India, are more obnoxious to the prevailing diseases, and this is especially the case with heat apoplexy, and also with cholera, which, as shown in Dr. Bryden's recent work, is far more common and fatal to the British soldier than to the sepoy. It may be easily calculated from these facts in how short a period the present European stock would, if not replaced, become extiuct; they also demonstrate that the colonisation of India by Europeans is utterly impracticable.—Indian Medical Gazette.

GRIEVANCE OF THE CACHAR PLANTERS.—A correspondent of the Friend of India thinks that Lord Mayo's reply to the memorial of the Landholders' and Commercial Association is far from being as reassuring as could be desired. It contains no hint that any attempt will be made to exact retribution for past insult and injury. His Excellency is convinced that it is "mainly by the co-operation of tea planters that any measures taken by the Government can succeed;" that they must be "ever ready to defend themselves and ward off sudden attacks." Does his lordship mean that tea proprietors are to bear a large share of the expense of defending the Imperial frontier? If it is "mainly" by their co-operation that he hopes to defend it it can have no other meaning. Are outlying gardens to maintain, at their own cost, armed bodies to assist the Government in defending themselves and its numerous native subjects, with whom they are unconnected, from inroads made by other subjects over whom Government refuses to exercise proper control? That they are all our nominal subjects is beyond denial, and to throw upon private enterprise engaged in utilising hitherto worthless jungle the responsibility of coercing them is a monstrous proposition, which his Excellency will regret having made when it is put before him in its naked absurdity. His lordship says that "in some cases gardens have been pushed further into the jungles than was prudent," and that the defence of an "extensive and scarcely defined frontier is a responsibility that the Government cannot accept;" and that the "first step towards permanent defence should be to clearly define the limit within which the Government is prepared to establish, maintain, and enforce its authority." May we ask his Lordship with whom does the responsibility of defining this limit rest? Was the public justified or not in assuming that the localities in which Government was offering land, or pottah and fee-simple tenures, was within this limit? Or was it the duty to ascertain this before responding to the Government offer? Surely a distance of twelve miles from the station could not come under the description of excessive "pushing" into the interior, and yet a village was destroyed and many of its inhabitants murdered no further from the centre of authority. The siege of Monierkhall was kept up for nearly two days within twenty miles, so proximity to authority afforded no assurance of protection. The offer to sell in fee simple will be ten years old in October next, and the offer to lease under pottah nearly twice as old. His lordship appears to be under the impression that it was but yesterday, or the day before, that the "pioneers" pushed into the jungle, and the "dangers incident to turn in all parts" of the world have not had time to disappear. It is a weak attempt on the part of Government to throw upon the sufferers from its neglect and supineness a responsibility which rests upon its own shoulders.

Imports.—Calcutta, March 8.—Saltpetre: What little business has been done during the week has been at a decline of from 4 to 6 annas. About 75 tons of Calcutta-refined Five per Cent. Refraction were sold at Rs. 7-1, and 50 tons crude at Rs. 6-13-6. The refiners have confined their operations, hoping for lower prices in common qualities. The stock consists of about 700 tons. Rice is slightly cheaper. The demand has principally been in second qualities for England, but the scarcity of tonnage has prevented any large amount of transactions. Linseed: There has been a good demand for shipment to America, but not much for England. Some new seed has arrived from the Eastern Bengal districts, and sold at full prices for new seed. A good crop is expected in the North-West Provinces. Rapeseed: The arrival of a considerable quantity of the new crop has had a tendency to lower prices, which, however, are still much above those for some years at this season. As the crop is expected to be short, no further fall is anticipated. Prices range from Rs. 3-14 to 4 for Eastern Bengal, and from Rs. 4-6 to 4-10 for North-West Provinces grain. Teaseed: Prices have again advanced, owing to the out-turn of the crop having been ascertained to be below the average. Business has been done in new black at an advance of nearly 12 annas on the last quotations, and the rate offering at present is Rs. 4-14, with a short supply. Poppyseed: But little business has been done, holders standing out for full prices. The quotation is Rs. 4-2 to 4-4. Jute: Stocks are getting low, especially of the low and fine qualities, and prices have been fully maintained. Transactions have been entered upon to the extent of about 1,500 bales per day, and we quote Serajgunge Rs. 4-12 to 6-4; Dasee, Rs. 4-14 to 5-4. Nothing has been done in well-known marks. Raw Silk: About 50 bales of native have changed hands at from Rs. 14 to 19-8 for common to good Jungypore. Most of the European filatures are being shipped on owners' account. The prospects of the March bund are reported favourable. Silk Piece Goods: Nothing doing during the week.

Madras.

Civil.—Mr. J. D. Gordon, who succeeds Colonel Malleson as guardian to the Maharajah of Mysore, arrived in Bangalore on March 6. Mr. Ross Mangles, C.S.I., the Acting Judicial Commissioner of Mysore (newly appointed), is shortly expected from Bengal.

Military.—The steamer Atalanta, bringing troops to Madras, after having put into Lisbon and Malta to repair damage to her machinery, arrived at Colombo yesterday, and sails to-day for Madras. —Madras Mail, March 4.

Telegraph to Ootacamund.—Before the Madras Government have migrated to the Neilgherries this year Ootacamund will most probably have been placed in direct telegraphic communication with Madras.—Madras Mail.

Captain J. Obbard.—We are glad to learn that on a further representation of the excellent services rendered by this gentleman during his long connection with the Military Fund Office the Government of India have resolved to recommend to the Secretary of State that he be permitted to retire on a pension of £375 per annum.—Madras Athenæum, March 6.

Native English.—A gentleman who applied to a native shopkeeper in Wynaad for a bottle of brandy received the following reply:—"Sir, those man's av not given leave for sample as before so. I returned the money. If you want—any more to get from here. Please you must send for—3 bottles—or other ways. You can not get—so you dont be sory."

Soldiers in India.—Nearly one thousand men belonging to five regiments serving in India, whose time of service in this country has expired, and who are at liberty to elect to go home if they wish, have preferred to remain in India. The Friend of India believes that these men, who have thus volunteered for further Indian service, are mostly benedicts, and considers this a very suggestive fact for our army administrators. There can be no doubt that, independently of other and perhaps more important considerations, moving about with a wife, and possibly a family, is a matter which induces the married man, under ordinarily comfortable circumstances, to remain stationary, while the single man, who has not this inducement to do so, is desirous of change, and perhaps may even wish to go home to get a wife. The balance, any how, seems to be in favour of the married soldier.—Madras Athenæum.

Cotton.—The report of the Madras Board of Revenue states that the land under cotton cultivation in that presidency in 1858 was 983,040 acres:—It only advanced to 1,020,184 during the next ten years, but after the beginning of the American war the cultivation increased in three years to 1,766,312 acres. This occurred in the season of 1863-64, but in 1866 67 the area had fallen to 1,316,944 acres. Last year (1869-70) saw a cultivation nearly equal to that of the best period during the American war—namely, 1,604,028 acres. We gather, the Madras Times says, that Madras has not shown the same fluctuations in the growth of cotton that have been witnessed in the North-Western Provinces, the latter province grew only about 800,000 acres of cotton in 1867, against 1,700,000 in 1864, while the high prices of last year failed to raise the cultivation beyond 1,250,000 acres, an area considerably less that that shown by Madras during the worst year since the beginning of the American war.

P. W. D. Defalcations in Tinnevelly.—A Tinnevelly correspondent of the Madras Mail writes on the 27th Feb.:—"In connection with the P. W. D., there has been great excitement down here, and there will be much more before many days transpire. A sub-engineer has been arrested and committed to the Sessions, bail being refused for him. The defalcations or misappropriations, or whatever they may be called, are said to be enormous, such as pass credibility almost, and certainly such as will astonish the taxpayers of this presidency, out of whose pockets the funds expended upon public works are provided. The public will assuredly ask how it was possible for such misdemeanours to arise, and who is responsible for them. It is as well perhaps not to mention, at present, the particular charges upon which the accused are to be criminally tried, but as soon as they are arraigned in the Sessions Court I shall send them. The trial will possibly be a lengthy one, as there are a great number of witnesses summoned, several of them being members of the Civil Service. Mr. Macgregor's commission to investigate the charges against the P. W. D. officers has been cancelled by Government, and the collector is proceeding against them in the usual manner."

The Madras Command-in-Chief.—It is a melancholy thought, but what will become of General McCleverty's Staff? Captain Henderson goes to the north of India to join his regiment, but Major St. Hill finds "no work to do." Of course General Shubrick has his own Staff, and will only need the services of the Commander-in-Chief's Military Secretary. We have seen and heard so little of General McCleverty since his last return to India that we are probably not sufficiently aware of the value of the services that we shall lose by his return to England. Had he been a more active and shrewd Chief, he might have succeeded in postponing the consideration of that question, "Why three Chiefs?" Madras is, therefore, under an obligation to his Excellency for having hastened on the inevitable abolition of a costly command. From the abolition of the minor Commanders-in-Chief, to the abolition of minor Governors with Boards of Revenue, will be but a step. These are cruel times for Indian magnates, since they are hard times for the general public. When an Advocate General, himself drawing Rs. 2,500 a month for doing little indeed, publicly at the Council table deprecates the enormous salaries of the civil and military dignitaries, as Mr. Norton did last month, we cannot be very far off from reductions in the topmost ranks of the official world.—Madras Mail, March 6.

Insubordination in the 19th M.N.I.—We had almost hoped that some kind of contradiction or qualification of the statement we had recently to make about the 19th Regiment Madras Native Infantry would have reached us. No such contradiction or qualification has been made, because, we believe, there is nothing to contradict or qualify. We are thus brought face to face with the most uncomfortable fact that a whole regiment of native infantry has been permitted to commit two distinct acts of mutiny, not only with impunity, but with profit. The details of the story we believe to be these. When the regiment was brought down to Madras the men were ordered to attend to receive their pay from the proper officers, including the two months' advance which it is customary to give to soldiers about to embark for a foreign station. When the first man was called he refused to take his pay; and so with the second and third. It then came out that the whole regiment had agreed that they would not embark unless they got three months' advance of pay. As the refusal to accept pay when ordered to do so is an act of mutiny, the officer in attendance placed the men who had refused their pay in the guard-house, and reported the affair to his superiors. We are unable to say what steps were taken by the commanding officer or by the superior authorities to reduce the men to obedience; but this we know, that the matter ended in the latter getting their own way. After their demands had been conceded, the men were paraded, and on the commanding officer giving the word "right about face," or some such order, the whole line stood still and declared that they would not move until their imprisoned comrades had been released. From their point of view they were right to ask justice for their comrades; but they adopted a mode of demanding it to which no commander-in-chief with nerve for his position would have listened for a moment. The mutiny was successful, the prisoners were released, and the regiment was graciously pleased to return to its duty. Such a sad example of blundering and weakness is happily rare in the annals of the British army, and we cannot regret that the veteran officer who finds the burden of the chief command too heavy for his shoulders is about to seek the bracing influences of his native climate.—Madras Times, March 3.

Coal and Gold in Mysore.—The following letter from Dr. Hunter to Dr. Orr at Bangalore has been published by the Madras Mail:—"I received your kind letter with the box containing the samples of chlorite, decaying ditto containing gold, and the other accompanying strata. I have examined them carefully, and have no hesitation in saying that they contain true gold, true coal, and all the minerals which accompany these two substances, with the exception of the sandstone which I asked for in my letter of the 20th. Along with the gold you have sent chlorite, both compact and earthy, chlorite, slate, meuachanite in black lumps, and in small grains in the sand (this and chlorite almost invariably accompany gold). There are also blue quartz and a rotten kind of crumbly quartz in large grains, or crystals which I have seen amongst the strata from the Australian gold fields. The latter is yellowish white; yours is blueish grey and green from a little mixture of chlorite. The strata which you have sent along with the coal are also very good clay iron stone conglomerate, or plum-pudding stone; (this is often mistaken for a laterite, but it is a true transition conglomerate, very rich both in iron and manganese). I have it in seven or eight of our British coal series from Newcastle, Staffordshire, Coalport, Midlothian, Fife, Lanark-shire and Refrewshire; you have also sent along with your specimens of coal, black band iron, with a vein of quartz fibrous black hacmatite which resembles a piece of black petrified wood, and portions of decaying trap rocks, all of which are favourable. The coal is very poor shaly stuff, but very like what I have seen as a first thin outcrop. It burns feebly, and emits a bituminous smell, but does not actually catch fire. It smoulders away at a dull red heat, and leaves a very bulky ash. It is in very thin strata, apparently not more than half an inch to three-fourths of an inch in thickness, and much discoloured with the decaying green chlorite earth. It is also in very small pieces, but this is so far favourable as it is not likely to have been thrown there with all the accompanying haematite conglomerates and band iron, as these are never exported with coal, though I have seen an occasional lump of ironstone thrown out of coal bags on the beach. The coal you have sent, however, is poorer than any of those lately received from Colonel Haig from the Tal river and the Godavery, or the coal from Chanda and the Nerbudda. To determine first, if it occurs in situ, I would recommend you to apply to the Mysore Government for sanction to dig one or two holes at distances of twenty or thirty feet from the hole where this was thrown out, and let the coolies dig deeper so see if there are not frequent repetitions of the same strata, for true coal never occurs but in extensive beds, and the first few seams are seldom worth working. If you find any more seams I will come up at once. To enable us to determine the value of the chlorite earth, I wish you would order one ton of it to be sent to the School of Arts. I will get it washed and the gold tested by the Professor of chemistry, Dr. Percy, in London, and Dr. Archer in Edinburgh will be delighted to hear of your discoveries, and if you send me a basket full more of the rough stones already sent, I will get you the true coal formations of England and Scotland in exchange, as they are promised already. You should also send us the limestones and sandstones or slates of the vicinity. They are important."

Military.—The annual inspection of H.M.'s 2nd Grenadiers took place on the 3rd and 4th instant. Major-General Grant, after the parade in drill order was over, called Colonel MacLeod, the officer in command of the regiment, and expressed his entire satisfaction with the condition of the regiment, and the manner in which they had performed all the manœuvres according to the new military regulations. Their firing was most accurate, and their appearance manifested unmistakeable signs of perfect discipline and obedience to command.—Deccan Herald, March 6.—The 1st Squadron of the 1st Regiment Light Cavalry arrived here from Rajcote on Tuesday morning last, under the command of Captain Jenkins.—The head-quarters wing of H.M.'s 12th Regiment N.I. arrived at Belgaum on the 28th ult. from Aden, under the command of Colonel C. S. Scott.—Poona Observer, March 9.

Dharwar Cotton Report.—Dharwar, March 1.—Our latest home telegram is dated Liverpool 22nd ult., fair Dhollera on that date being worth 6¾d. per lb. During the fortnight purchases in the district and at the coast ports have amounted to one thousand candies Sawginned and three hundred candies Compta, the former at Rs. 195-9 and the latter at Rs. 170-3, f.o.b. Carwar, all March. There has been more inquiry on native account, and which still continues, especially on the coast. For purchases in the districts we quote Sawginned Rs. 195, Compta Rs. 173, March shipment from Carwar; the price on the coast for immediate shipment is Rs. 198 for Sawginned and Rs. 175 for Compta. The quality of both varieties now coming to hand is satisfactory. The weather, although much warmer now than it was a fortnight ago, continues favourable to the cotton plants, and a full yield is looked for throughout the district generally. Picking is now in full swing, and a considerable quantity of cuppas has now been brought into the villages. Several gins are working, and sample orders can now be executed to a moderate extent, for delivery here in a fortnight, after which purchases in bulk will be practicable, but we do not expect to see any docras of new cotton reach the coast before April, and dealers are not willing to contract for a shorter time than all April delivery at Carwar. The price now asked is Rs. 210, usual terms.

Education in the Native States.—Mr. Peile, the Director of Public Instruction in this presidency, has urged on Government the desirability of organising some regular educational system for native States. He tells us that in Kattywar, Kolhapoor, Kutch, Sawunt Warree, and Rewa Kanta, the most important step of all has been taken by establishing an inspecting agency and a graded system of schools, and he asks why what has been done there should not be done in other large and important States. In particular he calls attention to the territory (Baroda) ruled by H. H. the Gaekwar, in regard to which he says, "The Baroda Government does not include public instruction in any way among the duties of its administration. If so, there are a million and a-half of people inhabiting a rich district in the midst of British Guzerat, for whose education no systematic measures are taken." With reference to the large area in the extreme north of the presidency, containing more than half a million inhabitants, Mr. Peile tells us—"There are not a few schools in the Mahee Kanta, and the Acting Superintendent of Pahlunpore has recently been good enough to express much interest in the schools of that agency, but the means of regular inspection are wanting." In the Cambay State, also, nothing systematic has hitherto been attempted, and the territory of the Hubshee (Junjeera) is in the same position. Political officers have been informed that Government concur generally in the views expressed by Mr. Peile, and will look to them to use their influence with the Durbars, in order that the necessary steps may be taken in those native States where as yet no regular system of State education exists.

East India Association.—The members of the Bombay branch of the East India Association held a meeting on Thursday, March 9, and adopted a petition to Parliament praying for a select committee on Indian affairs. The petition commences by expressing satisfaction that the appointment of a committee on the finances of India is to be made during this session, and submitting that the scope of that committee's enquiry should be so widened as to embrace generally the affairs of India. Twenty years nearly have now elapsed since the appointment of the last select committee, and now is the time, it urges, to sift the results of the past and inaugurate such a policy as the altered times have rendered necessary. The petition then proceeds to indicate the "principal subjects" requiring investigation and some "special problems" which "imperatively demand solution." The only point connected with the assumption by the Queen of the direct government of India is, whether the composition of the Council would not be improved by the introduction of a special department for agriculture and commerce, and the universality of the Council also improved by the appointment of a native member. Experience has taught the wisdom of providing for a more legitimate representation of the country in the Legislative Council than is afforded by the appointments of natives of wealth and rank, and it is suggested that inquiry should be made as to whether some initiative representative principle could not be introduced in these appointments. Another suggestion is whether the time has not now arrived to popularise municipal institutions. Next come two paragraphs in reference to the uncovenanted service, in which inquiry is asked as to whether it is not fair to the natives and conducive to the interests of the service to do away with patronage, and throw the service open solely to competitive examinations. About a third of the paper is then devoted to finance questions, in which a scheme of decentralisation and a reduction of the military expenditure and of the Home charges are advocated; and the petition closes with a prayer for inquiry as to the admission of natives to the ranks of commanding officers in the army, the prosecution of thrifty public works for the development of the resources of the country, extension of irrigation works, guaranteeing of Indian loans, higher grants for education, improvements in the administration of justice, and a better statement of the relations with native States. The petition was of course received very heartily at the meeting (which was not a very large one). A Parsee opposed it on the ground that it was too exhaustive, embracing more subjects than any fifteen gentlemen in England or Ireland could cope with. He had been reading Shakespeare as well as hearing the petition, and thought the latter was not impressive, earnest, and zealous enough for gentlemen sitting in London. Possibly he was right, but at all events the usual native speakers would have the last word, and the petition was adopted. It was agreed to ask the Council of the Association to get the petition presented to both Houses of Parliament.

Imports.—Bombay, March 11.—The Piece Goods Market has been very dull throughout the week, partly owing to the interruption of the demand from up-country, caused by the Hoolee holidays, but chiefly due to the discouraging tenour of the telegrams from England. In Grey Goods the clearances have been on a smaller scale than for some time back, and in Shirtings, T-Cloths, and Long-Cloths a decline of 1 to 2 annas per piece has had to be accepted to effect sales. The demand, such as it was, has run chiefly on Madapollams and Dhoties, prices for which are supported. Bleached Goods have been in very poor request, and our quotations are, to a great extent, nominal. In Dyed and Printed Goods business has been of the most unimportant character, and stocks are quite in excess of present requirements. Twist continues almost entirely neglected, and may be quoted generally ¼ to ½ anna per lb. lower. Metals, as a rule, are steady, but only a limited demand has been experienced.

Exports.—Bombay, March 11.—Cotton: The telegrams from England have reported lower rates daily, from the departure of last mail, until yesterday, and during the time prices here continued to give way, our quotations at the close showing a decline of Rs. 10 to Rs. 15 per candy, although the message of the 9th inst., received yesterday, induced a firmer feeling, and a recovery of Rs. 2 per candy from the lowest point. Notwithstanding the reduction in values, the purchases have not been heavy, those reported on European account for the week being only about 18,000 bales, but this is to some extent attributable to the interruption caused to business by the holidays, although more perhaps to the want of confidence induced by the continued heavy receipts at the American ports. From up-country the arrivals continue on a fair scale, and there is every appearance of the crop turning out fully equal in quantity to last season's. In other articles of export there is no special change to report.

Warrant Officers' Pay on Retirement.—The Right Hon. the Governor-General in Council has been pleased to decide that a warrant officer admitted to the pension of a sergeant major in England is entitled, up to the date of embarkation, to the pay and allowances of his warrant grade.

Courts Martial.—Walsh and Edwards.—At a general court martial, assembled at Lucknow, on Tuesday, the 8th day of November, 1870, No. 1,562, Private John Walsh, 37th regiment, attached to the 2nd battalion 60th Rifles, was arraigned on the following charges:—Charges: First—With having, at Seetapore, on the 13th October, 1870, without leave from his commanding officer, absented himself from his quarters, and so continued absent until Oct. 14, 1870. Second—With insubordination, accompanied with personal violence, in having, at Seetapore, on the 14th October, 1870, offered violence against Colour Sergeant Robert Prideaux, 2nd battalion, 60th (Royal Rifles) regiment, by attempting to strike him with his fist, the said Colour-sergeant Prideaux being his superior officer, and being in the execution of his office. Finding: Guilty of both the charges. Sentence: To suffer penal servitude for the term of five years. —Signed, A. H. Corbe, Lieut.-colonel, 1-17th regiment, president. Luck-now, Nov. 8, 1870. Confirmed: The sentence will be carried out in India.—Signed, Napier of Magdala, General, Commander-in-Chief in India. Head-quarters Camp, Moradabad, November 20, 1870.—At a general Court-martial, at Morar, Gwalior, Dec. 28, 1870 (Col. G. Holroyd, president), Private John Edwards, 1st battalion 11th regiment, was charged with insubordination, accompanied with personal violence, in having, when a prisoner undergoing sentence of a district court-martial, struck with his clenched fist, and thereafter used violence against a lance corporal by throwing a stone at him, at the same time using threatening and insubordinate language to the effect—"I will knock your brains out;" the said lance corporal being his superior officer, and in the execution of his office. He was found guilty, and sentenced to fifteen years' penal servitude. The sentence has been commuted by the Commander-in-Chief to seven years' penal servitude, the first five years to be carried out in India.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

The Overland Transport Service.

Head-quarters, Poonah, Feb. 22.—No. 151.—The following extract from a letter from the Secretary to the Government of India, No. 1,073, dated Jan. 27, is published, with reference to the G.G.O. No. 222 of 1864, G.G.O. No. 785 of 1869, G.G.O. No. 465 of 1870, and G.G.O. No. 62 of 1871:—

The G.O. of 1864 was published before the overland transport service was established, and it granted to officers required to proceed by sea on medical certificate a free passage from any stations "beyond sea" at which they may be stationed or employed and back to their stations on return from such leave. Practically, at that time officers were required to repair to their own Presidencies before embarkation on leave to Europe or elsewhere.

3. The term "beyond sea" was limited in the case of the Madras Presidency to "foreign" service stations, and in the Bombay Presidency to "stations not easily accessible unless by sea, or in proceeding to and from which the sea route is always adopted."

4. The later G.O., viz., No. 1,109 of 1869, however, applies only to officers proceeding on duty or sick leave who are required to go to Bombay for embarkation in one of her Majesty's troop ships, with the privilege of free passage by rail for themselves and families. This order, I am to observe, was in no way intended to cancel the provisions of the G.O. of 1864, but on the contrary to enhance its advantages.

5. In operation, the two rules would act thus: An officer at a station "beyond sea" would, if he came within the provisions of both, obtain free passages either to Bombay itself, or, according to circumstances, to the nearest port by which Bombay could be reached by rail, or free railway passage to the nearest port by which Bombay could be reached by sea only. Or an officer of the Bengal or Madras army stationed at Rangoon would be entitled to free sea passage to Calcutta or Madras, and free rail passage from Calcutta to Bombay; or, if a Madras officer, to free rail passage to Beypore, and then to free sea passage to Bombay.

6. In such case the conditions as to the conveyance of an officer's family will, so far as the sea voyage is concerned, strictly follow the earlier order No. 317 of 1864.

7. To the extent above indicated the Right Hon. the Governor-General in Council is pleased to sanction the extension of the order to warrant officers.

THE FAMINE IN RAJPOOTANA.

From C. E. R. Girdlestone, Esq., Officiating Junior Under Secretary to the Government of India, to Col. J. Cheap Brooke, Officiating Agent to the Governor-General in Rajpootana.

Feb. 14, 1871.

I have the honour to inform you that I have laid before the Viceroy and Governor-general in Council your detailed report on the late famine in the native States of Rajpootana and in the British districts of Ajmere and Mhairwarra, which was forwarded under cover of your letter, dated Dec. 9, 1870.

2. In reply, I am directed to state that the Viceroy and Governor-General in Council has read this report with deep interest. It is a most valuable record of a terrible calamity, rendered still more terrible by the cholera and fever which followed in its track. So severe and widespread was the drought of 1868, that not only was it found impossible to cultivate the land, but from want of sustenance the pack-bullocks, on whose loads of foreign grain the country so much depends for an adequate supply of food, even in ordinary times, died in large numbers, and thus importation was brought nearly to a standstill. Within an area of one hundred thousand square miles the suffering was very great; it was intense in parts of the Native States and throughout British territory. It is estimated that, from Marwar alone, one million persons, or two-thirds of the entire population, emigrated, taking with them more than two million head of cattle. In the whole tract affected by famine, it is computed that one million and a quarter of human beings died from starvation or disease.

3. Whilst deeply deploring these results, his Excellency in Council has been much gratified with the general zeal and earnestness displayed throughout the whole period of this calamity in the hope of mitigating distress. Colonel Keatinge, the agent to the Governor-general, took instant measures to afford relief both in British and native territory. Through his influence and that of his Political Agents the native Governments were induced to abandon transit duties on grain, and to make provision for their starving subjects. At his suggestion also arrangements were set on foot by which a large amount of grain was introduced from Sinde and the N.W. Provinces. In Ajmere and Mhairwarra Captain Repton and his assistants, Captain Lassalle and Captain Quin, were unwearied in their efforts, whilst Dr. Murray, the civil surgeon of Ajmere, was unremitting in his attention to the sick and dying. The officers stationed at the various cantonments in Rajpootana, the missionaries and the non-official community generally, readily devoted much time and money for the purpose of relieving the poor. The Viceroy and Governor-general in Council appreciates most thoroughly the value of all that was done on this sad occasion to save life, and desires that you will convey to each of the chiefs, officers, and gentlemen, whose services you have brought to notice, the cordial thanks of Government.

4. The sum total which the Government spent for the relief of the population of its own territory, numbering 426,000 souls, was 15,20,074 rupees. This sum is equivalent to nearly three years' gross revenue.

5. The efforts made by several of the native States of Rajpootana are deserving of high praise. The Maharajah of Jeypore disbursed between four and five lakhs of rupees in relief, and the Maharana of Oodeypore similarly devoted about five lakhs of rupees. His Excellency in Council has heard with much satisfaction of the liberality of these Chiefs, as also of the generous conduct of the Maharaj Rana of Jhallawar. Equally gratifying, too, is the intelligence that the Thakoors of Marwar and the merchants of Bombay contributed largely for the support of the starving.

6. The Viceroy and Governor-general in Council entirely agrees with your remarks as to the necessity of encouraging the construction of such minor irrigation works as tanks and reservoirs, wherever the formation of the country admits of these undertakings, and he trusts that both you and the political agents will lose no opportunity of impressing on native Governments the value of such works, and the importance of keeping in repair any that may now be in existence. The expediency of making loans in aid of the construction of such works and of wells to landholders in British territory, who have not independent means of executing them, should not be lost sight of.

7. The Government of the North-Western Provinces will be asked to consider the remarks made by you in the fifty-second paragraph of your report on the subject of the late remissions in Ajmere.

HEAD QUARTERS.—G.O.C. No. 136 of Feb. 25 is cancelled. The head quarters of the army will remain in Bombay until further orders.

Home.

Banks.—A general meeting of the National Bank of India is called for the 4th of April.—The ordinary general meeting of the Chartered Bank of India, Australia, and China will be held on the 19th of April. The transfer books will be closed from the 12th to the 19th April, both days inclusive.

Telegraphs.—The traffic receipts over the line of the British-Indian Extension Telegraph Company, for the four weeks ending 25th March, amounted to £3,707.—The Falmouth, Gibraltar, and Malta Telegraph Company announce a further revision of tariff, to take effect on and after the 1st April.

A Ship Channel between India and Ceylon.—At a meeting on Tuesday night of the East India Association, Mr. Eastwick, M.P., presiding, Sir J. Elphinstone delivered an address on a proposal to cut a channel for ships between India and Ceylon. He stated that the present passage, called Pamban passage, is not suitable for large ships. It was proposed to cut for 250 to 300 yards through a sand bank, which would give access to a harbour of sixteen square miles, perfectly smooth, with an anchorage of twenty-four to thirty-six feet. The estimated cost was £90,000.

The Burmese Visitors.—The Paden Yvoon, Secretary to the King of Burmah, with his three travelling companions—Moung Mhew, Moung Oung Thoo, and Yvau Zeray, officers of the Burmese Body Guard—accompanied by Captain Sprye, visited the Earl of Derby on Thursday. They afterwards proceeded to the Bank of England, where they were received by the Governor, Mr. Crawford, M.P., who himself showed his distinguished visitors over some parts of the establishment, and then deputed other gentlemen to explain all that was likely to interest them. After partaking of refreshment with the deputy-governor and the directors present, the party left for the India-office, for the purpose of being introduced to the Duke of Argyll.

Suez Canal.—We have received the following with reference to the Suez Canal Company:—"To the Editor.—Sir,—Numerous letters having been addressed to me inquiring when the interest due on the obligations of the Suez Canal is to be paid, will you permit me to inform your readers that these payments have been deferred till after the general meeting of shareholders to be held in Paris on the 29th of April next, when the necessary explanations will be given by M. Ferd. de Lesseps? According to the official report just received from Egypt, the revenue derived from transit dues, rental on landed property, and other sources, is stated to be 814,011f. 44c. for the month of February last; but, as it appears that these receipts include an item of 20,770f. 38c., arising from the sale of old material and machinery, the true monthly return will be more correctly represented by the sum of 793,241f. 6c., or in round numbers £31,730.—I have the honour to be, Sir, your very obedient servant, Daniel A. Lange, English Director of the Suez Canal Company. London, March 27."

Military.—It appears from a Parliamentary return just issued that thirteen general officers and colonels of Royal Artillery have retired on £600 a-year during 1868, 1869, and 1870. During the same period, two general officers and colonels of the Royal (late Indian) Artillery have retired on pensions of £456 and £750 respectively. Thirteen hundred marine torpedoes are in course of delivery at the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, by Messrs. Spencelaigh and Archer, of Rochester, under a contract with the War Department, and are now being tested by hydraulic pressure as they arrive on the wharf. The thirteen hundred will consist of five hundred of the largest size, each calculated to contain 500lbs. of gun cotton, three hundred for 250lbs, and five hundred for 100lbs. Experiments have been made by the Royal Engineers with about fifty of these torpedoes, which are fired by electric wire from the shore, or friendly vessels, and the result has been their adoption for the service. When the whole are delivered at Woolwich, they will be distributed to the naval authorities at the various seaports at home and abroad.

Agra Bank.—The report of the Agra Bank (Limited), to be submitted on the 4th instant, states that the net profits during the past twelve months, including the balance brought forward, amounted to £47,171, and that the available balance is £33,791, after deducting the interim dividend paid in October. Owing to the heavy decline in cotton and silk during the war, and to the consequent failure of some of the customers of the bank, the directors have determined to reserve out of the profits the sum of £14,000. After making this provision, there will remain £19,791, out of which a dividend is recommended at the rate of four per cent. per annum, free of income tax, leaving £75 to be carried forward. It is hoped that the improvement of trade and the stimulus that will be given to commercial transactions of all kinds by the cessation of hostilities on the Continent will afford better opportunities than have recently been available of employing the funds of the undertaking to advantage. A payment of £1. 5s. per share on account of return capital is announced on the old shares of the late Agra and Masterman's Bank. The progress made in the realisation of the assets of the old bank in India has fallen short of expectation.

Colonel Anderson, R.A.—The retirement of Colonel Anderson, C.B., who for thirty years has served in her Majesty's Regiment of Royal Artillery, and of late has commanded in the Western District, is announced. This gallant officer has enjoyed the esteem and affection of all his subordinates, and the news that he is relinquishing his active duties will be received with general regret by all who have professionally been brought into contact with him. In leaving his command he has issued an order of the day, in which he heartily thanks all who have served under him for the ready support they have given him. Specially he mentions Colonel Grant, A.D.C. to her Majesty; Captain and Adjutant Borton, Captain Cottingham, Surgeon-Major Bone, M.D., and Lieut. Hutchinson, for their untiring zeal. He will ever watch with the deepest interest the future career of his comrades, and he now bids them a hearty farewell. Colonel Anderson served in China, where he took part in the storming of Chin Kiang Foo; the Crimea in 1854, and the siege of Sebastopol, for which he was decorated; in India in 1857-58, at Pandora and the capture of Meangunge, and also at the taking of Lucknow, in which latter campaign he was four times mentioned in despatches, received a medal with clasps, and the brevet of Lieut.-Colonel.

Albert Assurance Company.—On Tuesday the Lords' Committee passed the Albert Life Assurance Company's Arbitration Bill. The name of Lord Cairns was inserted in the blank which had been left for the name of the arbitrator.—The following letter has been addressed to the editor of the Times:—"Albert Life Asssurance Company, 33, Poultry, London, E.C., March 24.—Sir,—I was much astonished to learn from last evening's newspaper that the Bill for settling by arbitration this unfortunate company's affairs is opposed by the New Albert Life Assuran ce Company (Limited), of the plan of which I am the author, but in respect of which I have not been consulted since November, 1870. Now, my friends assisted me to found the New Albert because none of the schemes put forward at that time properly considered the interests of the policy-holders, and for the same reason we strenuously opposed the subsequent scheme of the committee of which Mr. Thomson is chairman. However, I take a widely different view of the Bill lately before Parliament, and, as a policy-holder and creditor of the New Albert, propose to form a committee to inquire (1) the grounds of opposing the Bill in Parliament, (2) who are giving instructions, (3) out of what fund are the expenses provided, and (4) to act generally. A scheme that will do justice to all, should, in my opinion, have the support of all, and the enormous expenses now going on should, if possible, be brought to a close. Any gentleman wishing to join the committee will be good enough to write to that effect as above.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant, Chas. H. Edmands."

Indian Railways.—With regard to the East Indian Railway Company and its debenture-holders, a correspondent writes to the Times as follows:—"I was glad to observe that you took notice of the somewhat sharp practice of the East Indian Railway Company with reference to the right of conversion enjoyed by holders of their bonds, and if you could inform the public which of the Indian companies act as the East Indian seem to do, and which follow a different course, you would confer a boon upon those seeking investments. The Great Indian Peninsula Company gives notice before expiry, as is customary, but the Bombay, Baroda, and Central India Company do not, and thus a sort of trap is set for the unwary who happen to hold both. Into this trap a friend of mine fell the other day (in January last). He was nine days late in giving to the Bombay and Baroda Company the necessary six months' notice of his intention to 'renew,' but, in spite of the hardship of the case, and of his having sent the company an intimation he had received only a few weeks before from the Great Indian Peninsula Company, showing their practice, advantage was taken of the slip, and the bonds will be paid off in July next. The option to 'convert' was, of course, also held to be forfeited. These bonds were bought at a premium because of their being 'renewable and convertible.'" A debenture-holder of the Bombay, Baroda, and Central India Railway Company confirming the above statement adds:—"It appears to me that the wording of the bonds of both these companies is very loose indeed, and I would very much like to test the matter in a court of law, or to contribute to any fund got up by the aggrieved debenture-holders for this purpose."

The Indian Mutiny Relief Fund.—The annual report of the committee of the Indian Mutiny Relief Fund for the year 1870 has appeared. The balance-sheet from 1st January to 31st December, 1870, shows the subjoined assets and receipts. To balance from 31st December, 1869, £155,261. 18s. 6d.; to subscriptions received, £6; to interest on securities, £5,919. 11s. 3d.; total assets, £161,187. 9s. 9d. The expenditure was as follows:—By relief granted during the year, £14,500. 12s. 3d.; by loans, £10; by expenses of management, viz., advertisements, £6.; salaries, £338. 4s. 2d.; stationery and printing, £17. 5s. 3d.; rent of offices, £50; stamps, postage, and charges on post-office orders, £49. 8s. 10d.; total of expenses of management, £461. 4s. 3d.; total of expenditure, £14,971. 16s. 6d.; by balance on 31st December, 1869, £146,215. 13s. 3d.; grand total, £161,187. 9s. 9d. The securities in the Bank of England on the 31st of December, 1870, are as follows:—£89,300 Canada Four per Cent. Bonds, and £50,000 East India Four per Cent. stock, which securities represent cash value of £142,138. 3s. 9d.; balance on current account with Bank of England, £4,074. 9s. 6d. ; cash in secretary's hands, £30—£146,215. 13s. 3d. Examined and audited, signed D. FORREST, auditor. The following statement shows the number and description of the various classes of sufferers receiving relief from the fund on the 31st of December, 1870 :—Widows and other relatives of officers, civil and military, in the United Kingdom, 142 ; ditto in India and the colonies, 29 ; widows and other relatives of soldiers, seamen, and marines in the United Kingdom, 388 ; ditto in India and the colonies, 26 ; orphan children in educational establishments, 54 ; total recipients, 639. During the period under review the alterations show an actual decrease of 132 in the number of recipients, reducing the annual expenditure by the sum of £1,280. 10s. The following individuals were admitted to the benefaction of the fund :—1 soldiers' orphan ; 11 soldiers' widows on second widowhood ceased to receive allowances ; 8 sons of officers who had attained the prescribed age ; 127 orphan children of soldiers ditto ; 1 widow of an officer, allowance commuted ; 5 soldiers' widows remarried ; 3 ditto deceased.

Imperial Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MONDAY, March 27.—THE MARTINI-HENRY RIFLE.—In reply to a question of Colonel BARTTELOT, Mr. CARDWELL said his predecessor in office had appointed a committee to examine as to what rifle should be adopted, and, before his accession to office, the committee reported in favour of the Martini-Henry rifle. He had referred that report to the Ordnance Committee, and after the weapon had been tried in hot and cold climates, and under various circumstances, the result had proved eminently satisfactory ; and those results, which were embodied in a report, had been laid on the table. He had reappointed the committee, and they had reconsidered their report, which had also been laid on the table. Inquiry was an excellent thing, but there was a time when inquiry ceased to be valuable, and when action was necessary. (Hear, hear.) He thought, if they were to supply the troops with the best weapon, the time for action had come. (Hear, hear.)

PRIVATE ARRANGEMENTS BETWEEN OFFICERS.—In reply to Mr. O'REILLY, Mr. CARDWELL said the present practice would be applied with regard to stopping exchanges from full to half-pay by private arrangements between officers for money considerations. With regard to the principle of selection, it would not be limited to officers on full pay, but would be extended to officers on half-pay.

EDUCATION OF ARTILLERY OFFICERS.—In answer to Mr. S. BEAUMONT, Mr. CARDWELL said it was not proposed to appoint a new officer to the post of Director-in-Chief of Artillery, but that provision was made for two instructors of artillery, one at Aldershot and the other at Woolwich.

ABOLITION OF PURCHASE.—Mr. CARDWELL stated, in answer to Sir TOLLEMACHE SINCLAIR, that the Army Regulation Bill provided full indemnity against any losses caused by its passing ; but it was not intended to confer, at the public expense, advantages not enjoyed under the present system. There would be no alteration in the system of making officers liable for the expenses of regimental bands.

HOUSE OF LORDS, TUESDAY, March 28.—MILITARY EDUCATION.—Lord STRATHNAIRN moved that an humble address be presented to her Majesty for returns of the number and statements of service of garrison instructors, and copies of instructions given to them for the execution of their duties by the Secretary of State for War, as well as copies of any instructions given by him or of communications made by the Royal Commission on the military education of officers of her Majesty's army consequent on the Commissioners' report on that subject. The noble and gallant peer said that the fate of France was a striking proof of the evils that flowed from a defective strategy. Through the same cause we had frequently seen movements against insurgents in our colonies frustrated, and an empire all but lost in India. The fault was that our officers were only taught a mechanical execution of movements, without proper instruction as to their object. With that instruction there would be no such officers in the world, for they combined, in a singular degree, steadiness when steadiness was necessary, and ardour when ardour was required. The noble lord gave many illustrations of the calamitous results of their technical shortcomings, amongst which he classed the failure of the attack on the Redan, and the disaster which had led to the siege of Lucknow. It was a complete mistake to attribute those shortcomings to the fault of the officers themselves ; it was really the fault of their instructors ; and the remedy was happily as easy as the evil was lamentable. (Cheers.)—Lord NORTHBROOK said that the general result of the Royal Commission on the Education of Officers entirely bore out what the noble and gallant lord had just said ; and since that Commission had reported every effort had been used to repair the deficiencies of which he had complained. In fact, great progress had already been used, nor would any exertion be wanting to carry it further. (Cheers.)—The Duke of CAMBRIDGE said that the subject had been under consideration for a very long period, and he hoped his noble friend would believe that since he (the illustrious duke) had occupied the position he had the honour to hold, steps had not been wanting tending in the direction desired by the noble lord. He believed that every officer in the service was as anxious upon the point as the noble lord himself, but the difficulties in the way had hitherto been enormous. It was only lately, for instance, that they had been allowed to collect men in masses, and yet, without practice, theory was good for very little. Abroad he had been astonished to see the damage to property which was done at reviews—damage which would never for one moment be tolerated in this country, at all events, unless the public was prepared to pay large sums as compensation. Possibly there were tracts of country where the Crown had forestal rights that could be utilised for this purpose. He felt quite sure that if they gave the English officer the means of gaining professional information, he would only be too glad to avail himself of them. (Cheers.)—Viscount HARDINGE also defended the officers of the army from the disparaging remarks which had latterly been made about them. At the same time he agreed with the report of the Committee that their education should be made more practical and less theoretical than it was at present. He must say that he should regret to see the principle of competitive examination applied to the army, for he was convinced that it would only increase what was admitted to be a great evil—"cramming."—The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, THURSDAY, March 30.—INDIAN ADMINISTRATION.—Mr. FAWCETT presented a petition, signed by native and European inhabitants of Calcutta and other parts of India, relating to the financial and general administration of the affairs of that empire. He said the petitioners alleged that the unsatisfactory nature of Indian finance did harm to the general credit of the country, and they alluded particularly to the extravagant expenditure on public works, and to the increase in the amount of Indian money spent in this country. They asked for various administrative reforms, and for permission to take evidence in India. He begged to give notice that he should move that the petition be printed, and on an early day he would call attention to the whole question with which it dealt.

THE INDIAN ARTILLERY AND ENGINEERS.—Sir C. WINGFIELD asked the Secretary for War why the late Indian, now Royal, Artillery and Engineers were not included in Clause 4 of the Army Regulation Bill, inasmuch as the bonus system prevailed in those corps equally with the twelve regiments of infantry and cavalry transferred from the service of the East India Company to that of the Crown.—Mr. CARDWELL : The late Indian Artillery and Engineers are not within the provisions of the compensation provided by the Act, because they are dying out, and their promotion is provided for, as a seniority corps, under the Act of 1860.

HOUSE OF LORDS.—FRIDAY, March 31.—THE ABYSSINIAN PRINCES.—Lord DERBY made inquiries relative to a mission said to have been sent to England by a friendly Abyssinian chief, but which had been detained in Egypt by the refusal of the Foreign-office to provide the necessary expenses.—Lord GRANVILLE explained the circumstances under which three letters addressed to the Queen by as many Abyssinian chiefs, of whom Prince Kassa was one, had been acknowledged by Lord Clarendon. Lord Napier of Magdala advised the Foreign-office that these Princes should address their communications to the English Resident at Aden, and that great care should be taken not to promise them guns and munitions of war, which might be used against each other. Prince Kassa did not follow Lord Clarendon's advice, and wished his Envoys to come to England. Neither the India-office nor the Foreign-office was, however, inclined to supply funds for this purpose. The Foreign-office had acted in conformity with the advice of Lord Napier of Magdala in making no distinction in favour of one Prince, which might excite the jealousy of the rest.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, FRIDAY, March 31.—ARMY COMMISSIONS.—In reply to a question from Mr. STAPLETON, Mr. CARDWELL said it was the intention of the Army Regulation Bill to prohibit all pecuniary transactions with respect to commissions in the army.

ABOLITION OF PURCHASE IN THE ARMY.—In reply to Mr HARDY (who put the question in the absence of Mr. Disraeli), Mr. CARDWELL denied that the word "compensation" properly described those provisions of the Army Regulation Bill which dealt with the abolition of purchase. The object intended was rather to give indemnity against any possible loss to officers in regard to the pecuniary value of the commissions which they held. He hoped the provisions of the Bill were so liberally drawn that full effect would be given to that principle, without the delay which would be involved in the appointment of a select committee.

NOTICES OF MOTION.—Colonel BARTTELOT gave notice that on the 28th of April he would call attention to the report, and move for a Committee on the Martini-Henry Rifle.—Colonel BERESFORD gave notice that on the 28th of April he would call attention to the insufficient supply of pellet and pebble gunpowder, and move for certain papers.

Spirit of the Home Journals.

ENGINEER OFFICERS FOR INDIAN PUBLIC WORKS.

The Army and Navy Gazette thinks there can be little doubt of the value to India of the services of the Royal Engineer officers, or of the appreciation in which they are held by the Indian Government, and if the latter could have obtained as many of them as it wanted for its public works, it is very probable that the Indian Engineering College would not have been established. But it is, we are informed, the case that the urgent applications repeatedly made by the Indian authorities of late years for the services of more officers from this corps have not been responded to, while even the employment of the limited number supplied has been coupled with conditions which must tend very much to nullify the value of their services. If officers sent to India are to be removed every few years, without reference to the convenience of the Indian Government, simply because it is a rule of the corps that its members are to be relieved according to uniform roster, it is not to be expected that the Indian Government would be satisfied with entrusting all its public works to such an agency. Reliefs and rosters may be very well when officers go from one station to another to carry out current duty of a routine character, but it would be utterly absurd to attempt to develop a great system of railways in this fashion. The committee which lately reported on the employment of Royal Engineer officers have now recommended, in substitution for this condition, that officers should be allowed to remain an indefinite time with a civil department requiring their services, but they have coupled this recommendation with what we must regard as the impracticable condition than an officer so electing should be removed from the active list of the corps. But if the officer declines to accept the boon on these hard terms, the condition would be wholly inoperative. It does not appear that the Indian Government was even consulted before this important change was proposed, although they were the parties most concerned, since the number of officers so employed in India far exceeds those in other parts, and it is not likely that Government would agree to a plan which is fundamentally opposed to the principles on which service is regulated in the Indian Staff Corps. The fact seems to be that the Royal Engineers had an excellent opportunity of advancing their interests which they have unfortunately thrown away. If those of them in authority—accepting the fact that India absorbed nearly half the corps, and offered a field for indefinite extension of their services—had regarded the matter from a larger point of view, and adapted their arrangements to the conditions of the case, they might very possibly have secured for the regiment a larger share in the important works to be undertaken in India. And no doubt the principal authorities would have been quite willing to make the needful compromises for meeting the demands and wants of both Indian and Home service. Unfortunately, however, the working out of the details of such a measure falls to subordinates, often unable to see things except from the narrow field of view to which they are accustomed. This is probably what has happened in the present case; a good scheme has been marred to satisfy narrow prejudices, and while subordinates were stopping the way with their small limitations and conditions, India was left without the engineers it wanted.

TRANSMISSION OF INDIAN, &c., MAILS, VIA THE BRENNER PASS AND BRINDISI.

The several lines of mail communication through France being exposed, by the operations of the War, to sudden interruption, the Postmaster-General considers that it has become absolutely necessary to divert the course of the British Overland Indian Mails, and to send them, for the present, through Belgium and Germany, and over the Brenner Pass, to Brindisi.

As the mails despatched on Friday evening will only reach Brindisi, under existing arrangements, a short time before the departure of the Packet, the Supplementary Mails hitherto despatched on Saturday morning will be discontinued.—By command of the Postmaster-General.—General Post-office, October 19, 1870.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, March 18; Agra, March 16; Calcutta and Madras, March 15.

No more raids are reported from the Cachar frontier, nor do we hear much of any movements among our own troops in that quarter. It appears that the Head-Quarters of the 4th and 44th N.I. are to stand fast on the frontier until after the rains. Detachments of the former go to Monierkhall, Jalnacherra, and Loharbund, of the latter to Sylhet, Chargola, and Alinuggur, for the purpose of building stockades and opening out roads from one outpost to another. The prevalent belief is that early in the next cold season half a dozen regiments will invade the Loshai jungles, three from the Cachar and the remainder from the Chittagong side.

THE Indian Government has announced its plan of action with regard to the defence of the North-Eastern frontier, through a letter addressed by the Foreign Secretary, Mr. Aitchison, to the Landholders' and Commercial Association of British India. The latter are informed that the Indian Government has for the last two years been busied with "the difficult question" of defending the Bengal frontier from Cachar to Arracan, that the wild border tribes are scattered about a vast tract of unexplored jungle, of which very little knowledge has been gleaned even by the expeditions sent out from time to time to punish raiders, and that not much success has hitherto rewarded the efforts of Government officers to gain some knowledge of the country, and to find out the causes and objects of the raids so often carried into British ground. To defend such a frontier is no easy work, nor can the insecurity of ages be remedied in a day. Settlers in these districts "must not be unprepared to face to some extent the dangers usually incident to pioneers in all parts of the world." Lord Mayo rests the success of any defensive measures his government may take mainly on the support they may win from the planters themselves and their agents. The entire defence of so wide and undefined a frontier is more than the Government feels itself warranted in undertaking. But the first step towards a practicable scheme of defence is to define the limits within which the Government is prepared to enforce its authority. A line stretching from the borders of Manipore to Hill Tipperah would include all the existing tea-gardens. As soon as the boundary shall have been settled, such cleared tracts as may be found suitable for defence will be opened up, posts will be established at proper intervals along the line, and the intervals themselves will be constantly patrolled. From a policy of watchful and vigorous defence Lord Mayo expects more lasting benefit than from retaliatory expeditions, and he insists on the duty of trying to win the goodwill and confidence of the outlying tribes by all possible means. To this end he has directed that all district-officers on the frontier shall encourage frequent and friendly intercourse with the tribes and their chiefs by going among them from time to time, persuading them to enter our service and frequent our markets, endeavouring to act as peacemakers between them and our own subjects, and using other like means to secure a lasting personal influence among these wild borderers.

THE assurances contained in this document have helped to allay the anxieties of the Cachar tea-planters with regard to the future; and the advice to lend a hand in their own defence has been promptly followed up, if it was not indeed forestalled, by a movement among themselves for the formation of a volunteer rifle-corps. With regard to the past however they still nourish a grievance against the Bengal Government, which encouraged so many of them to buy land along an undefined and unguarded frontier, without warning them of the risks they would thereby incur, and which took no adequate measures afterwards to save them from a recurrence of their former sufferings. There is some ground, we think, for these complaints if it be true that the planters bought their land in utter ignorance of the real state of affairs. At the same time one would think that previous raids would have taught them not to expect too much from official inertness, or even from Mr. Edgar's ill-rewarded zeal.

SIR R. TEMPLE'S Budget statement, which fills several pages of the Englishman's Overland Mail, has been received in India with a kind of surly resignation. The reduction of the income-tax to about one per cent. has not greatly softened the public heart towards Sir R. Temple, who is still charged with defiance of public opinion, with an obstinate blindness to the fruits of past experience in respect of the income-tax, and with an invincible leaning towards extravagant outlay on public works. Even the semi-official Pioneer avows "that the Finance Minister has failed to appreciate his true duty to the public, and to some extent has failed to profit by the public criticism of the past year." It is something however in Sir Richard's favour, as the Pioneer itself allows, that the reduced income-tax for the current year, being confined to incomes above Rs. 750 a-year, will exempt no fewer than 240,000 poor men from the burden which last year was shared among 480,000 in all. With regard also to the unexpected gain of a million upon opium, Sir Richard can hardly be blamed for a misreckoning based on data so sound that the highest estimate of the best authorities exceeded his by only £122,500. His apology for last year's income-tax on the other hand was quite as lame as anyone could expect, and his proposal to levy the reduced tax for an indefinite period has since, according to a recent telegram, been set aside by a majority of the Supreme Council, which decreed that the tax should be levied for one year only.

SIR RICHARD was more successful in defending the Home Government from the charge of spending money in England without due reference to India, and of giving the Indian Government no detailed accounts of the home outlay. He de-cleared that most of that outlay was incurred either on requisitions from India, or under rules proposed by the Indian Government. The accounts of the Home Government, made out in fullest detail, are transmitted to India regularly month by month, and once a year those accounts are published in the Gazette of India; so that the Indian public may know as much about every item of home outlay as it does about the money spent in India. We may note by the way that the ordinary home outlay for 1871-2 is estimated at £8,124,000, or £178,100 less than the "regular estimate" for the year before. As this however exceeded the Budget estimate by about three quarters of a million, we decline to crow beforehand over the reduction prophesied for the coming year. The military charges in England for the coming year are set down at about three and a-half millions, rather less than the total for last year. The increase of late years under this head is divisible between furlough allowances, stores, and transport service. The first of these items is balanced by a decrease on account of officers' pay in India. The increase on stores is due to the new breech-loading arms. It is only the augmented charge for the steam troopships about which Sir Richard feels at all anxious in the future. We are threatened with a still increasing outlay under this head, although "attention is being given to the matter."

The total estimated outlay for the coming year amounts to £52,631,500, of which 3½ millions are assigned to public works extraordinary. These include irrigation works for the Punjab, North-Western Provinces, Oudh, Behar, and Orissa, with some State Railways in the Punjab and Rajpootana. The delay in carrying on the former is ascribed in great measure to the careful enquiry bestowed on the several projects, and to the need of securing adequate returns in water-rent. Now that the question of railway guages has been settled in favour of a 3ft. 3 in. guage, Sir Richard looks to see an early development of the State Railway system, with especial regard to the supply of cheap salt from the Sambhur Lake.

The charge for guaranteed interest on existing railways for the coming year, is reckoned by Sir R. Temple at £1,856,900, or about £20,000 less than the regular estimate for the past year, which exceeded the Budget estimate by nearly £320,000, and the actual outlay of 1869-70 by a few thousands more. Between March and December last the whole capital outlay on railways had grown from eighty-three and a-half to eighty six and a-half millions. Five thousand miles of railway are now open, and a thousand more have been sanctioned or begun. Only three railways—the Great Indian, the Bombay and Baroda, and the Madras—have agreed to share with the Government half their net earnings above 5 per cent. for ever, on condition of their debt to the State being written off and the State's claim to buy the lines being deferred. The net traffic receipts on the existing lines have not lately kept pace with the general expectation, being rather less for last year than the year before. For the coming year an increase of £150,000 is allowed for in the Budget. At present the Indian Railways are paying an average of less than 3 per cent., the highest figure being 4·8 per cent. on the East Indian line, while the Great Southern of India and the Jubbulpore Extension pay only 1·4 and 1·2 per cent. Progress in this respect during the last five years has chiefly been confined to the Bengal Presidency. Great efforts have lately been made to check the further expansion of railway capital accounts, and a money limit has been fixed within which all outlay on particular works must be charged to revenue.

The recent revelations at Allahabad of the way in which poor Indian men and women may be kidnapped and carried off to an English colony by fellows who act as emigration-agents under the assumed control of an official Protector of Emigrants in Calcutta go far to confirm the cynicism of those who look on the modern coolie system as often little better than ancient slavery under a new name. Just as Presbyter was Priest writ large in Milton's eyes, so the emigration-agent of to-day too often bears an unpleasant resemblance to the slave-stealer of old. At Allahabad condign punishment has been promptly dealt on the gentlemen who entrapped a number of poor but good-looking young women into their "depot," with a view to earn seven rupees a head for shipping their victims off to Jamaica. But we should like to know how many pretty young women and able-bodied men have undergone the fate which these particular women escaped by a happy accident. But for the timely interference of the Rev. Mr. Evans some twenty poor creatures might have been duly passed before the proper authorities, and stowed on board ship at Calcutta under the eyes of their appointed "Protector." As for the horrors of the coolie trade with French settlements, a Note in the Pall Mall Gazette of last Saturday shows up the nature of that traffic as it were in a single lightning-flash. The Allahabad affair however seems to have stirred up the Indian Government to a fresh atttempt at checking the worst abuses of the present system. Mr. Chapman has brought in a Bill for the better protection of coolies in the Indian depots and on board ship. Mr. Campbell, the new Lieutenant-Governor, was for going yet further, by the appointment of local agents on behalf of Indian coolies in each of the British colonies; but owned himself satisfied with Mr. F. Stephen's reminder of the power of Government to stop emigration to any place where the emigrants are badly treated. We are not so ready to share his satisfaction, in view of the tendency in human nature to ignore abuses which it is inconvenient to acknowledge. The last Report from Demerara describes a state of things hardly consistent with the practice at Allahabad.

If Dr. Leitner has his circle of detractors in the Punjab, and finds his name omitted in the last batch of Fellows elected into the Calcutta University, his own countrymen appear less blind to his merits as an Oriental scholar. The Pioneer quotes, from the Vienna Gazette of December 2, 1870, a paragraph announcing that the Order of the Iron Crown, Third Class, had been conferred upon Dr. Leitner for his "meritorious services to the cause of education in the Punjab." The honour thus bestowed on him is said to rank above the Order of Francis Joseph, the one usually bestowed on distinguished men of letters. It also gives the wearer a kind of claim to official employment in Austria. The Pioneer may well contrast the homage paid to learning in the Austrian Empire with the pettiness that marked the dealings of learned Englishmen in Calcutta towards so distinguished a scholar as the head of the Lahore Government College.

We learn by telegraph that Lord Mayo reached Allahabad on April 6, and held a meeting of his Council to consider local Bills. In explaining his Budget for the North-West Provinces, Sir W. Muir announced the withdrawal of the intended licence-tax, thereby remitting £100,000 of local taxation as the first-fruits of the economy engendered by the new financial scheme. Mr. F. Stephen is said to have explained at some length the legal right of the Government to impose local taxes in spite of the Permanent Settlement. After a sitting of several hours Lord Mayo broke up the Council with a compliment to Sir W. Muir on his successful beginning with the new system of local Bills.

Mr. W. P. Andrew has just published another batch of letters addressed to the ruling powers of this country and elsewhere on behalf of his long projected, still unaccomplished Euphrates Valley Railway. To judge from a number of letters the replies to which are not given, the author's pet project has advanced some stages nearer execution than it stood a year or two ago. He no longer asks for any pecuniary aid from the British Government, being content with some assurance of their future countenance, in the way of sending mails, stores, and troops by the Euphrates Line whenever it may be opened. About the mails there need be no difficulty, but stores would surely travel cheaper if not quite so quickly by the Suez Canal, and it is open to grave question whether troops destined for India ought for sanitary reasons to undergo the long railway ride from the Mediterranean to the Persian Gulf, except in the most pressing emergencies. Nor do we share Mr. Andrew's apprehensions lest the transfer of the Suez Canal to an English company should hurt the prospects of the Euphrates Valley Railway. It ought not at any rate to do so. Each route has its own advantages, and for sound political reasons we cannot afford to lose any opportunity of strengthening our hold on Egypt and its ruler. With the Khedive for our fast friend and his Canal in the hands of an English company, we could face the Turkish problem with a quiet mind. On the other hand a railway from Alexandretta to Bussorah would secure us a good alternative route to India, a route whose usefulness would not be affected by any change of rulers at Constantinople. For mails and all goods requiring quick despatch the gain of eight or nine days by such a route would be of no small importance, and the sen-ng of troops by this line might sometimes perhaps be found ex-pedient even in time of peace, without harm to their bodily health. But after all it is rather to the development of overland traffic with Persia, Turkey, and the adjacent countries, than to any large amount of Government support, that Mr. Andrew should look for the chief financial results of his undoubtedly important scheme.

THE CIVIL ENGINEERING COLLEGE.

The revised advertisement issued from the India Office with regard to the coming examination for the Civil Engineering College seems to satisfy all reasonable demands on the part of those who voted against the Government scheme a few weeks ago. Whether they will be satisfied is another question. It was not to be expected that the Government would yield more than it could absolutely help to the clamours of a party which, under the cloak of free-trade principles, sought to maintain the vested interest of various teaching bodies in the right to furnish India with badly qualified civil engineers. The new advertisement informs the public that "successful competitors, who may be found on subsequent examination to be already qualified for the engineering service, will receive appointments without passing through the College." This concession to the claims of existing institutions and usages takes care, be it observed, to retain the power of the India Office to select its candidates by a preliminary examination on general subjects. It is still incumbent on any candidate for the Indian Public Works Department to prove himself up to the mark in general acquirements, before he proceeds to challenge a further trial of his fitness to dispense with the subsequent process of a preparatory training at Cooper's Hill. Such an arrangement has the advantage of being fair to all concerned. No one who has already qualified himself elsewhere for immediate service in India will be obliged to keep his terms at the Government College, while at the same time he cannot grumble at having to pass the preliminary test which certifies that his general education has not been neglected. Those also who object to the high charge of £150 a-year for the College course, as likely to keep out many deserving sons of poor gentlemen, will be glad to note another amendment in the revised notice, which provides that some part of the yearly charge may be defrayed by annual deductions from the student's pay after he has taken up his Indian appointment. As that pay will amount from the beginning to £420 a-year, such an arrangement will materially smoothe the way to candidates of limited means but high ambition.

THE PERMANENT SETTLEMENT.

The evidence hitherto taken by the Parliamentary Committee on Indian Finance has little direct bearing upon the great financial questions of the day. The witnesses are trustworthy and well-informed, but they have told us almost nothing which anyone fairly conversant with the Indian history of the last hundred years could not have previously learned for himself. Most of their evidence may be found in the records of former committees or in such standard works as Mr. Kaye's "Administration of the East India Company;" and the remainder merely brings together the facts contained in documents accessible to any inquirer. Sir Bartle Frere discourses with his usual clearness on the history of land-tenures in Western India since the British conquest. From Mr. Mangles we get some strongly expressed opinions on the character and results of the Permanent Settlement in Bengal, that theme of never-ending controversy, about which some other witness, equally able and well-informed, will probably express opinions flatly opposite, though quite as strongly held. Sir Robert Montgomery has gone with sufficient thoroughness into the question of the land tenures in the Punjab; Mr. R. Dalyell into those of Madras; and in due time other old Indians, equally competent and painstaking, will display their acquaintance with the administrative past in other portions of our Indian Empire. To judge by their present pace and scale of work, the Committee will have many days to sit before they see the goal of their labours.

Their time however will not have been misspent if they succeed in applying to some practical purpose the fruit of inquiries which certainly promise to cover a wide space of ground. To satisfy all reasonable demands on the side of India and to enlist the intelligent interest of Englishmen at home in questions of Indian polity, are results worth achieving at the cost of some redundancies and roundabout processes in the conduct of the inquiry. It may in the long run prove more of an advantage than a drawback that so much of the old ground should be gone over, if the statesmen of England should thereby be enabled to form clear and just conclusions on matters hitherto left to the sole care of a few official experts and their local agents. By bringing into one focus the experiences and opinions of many competent witnesses on everything connected with the financial administration of India, the Committee, if they are worth their high office, should at least succeed in illuminating some of the dark places of Anglo-Indian politics, in exposing past errors, clearing up old misunderstandings, and pointing out the best roads to practical reform in the future. What is the truth for instance with regard to the permanent settlement of the land revenues in Bengal? Was Lord Cornwallis's scheme for creating a body of loyal landlords a mischievous mistake or a well-considered and fruitful reform? According to Mr. George Campbell, whose comprehensive essay on "The Land Tenures of India" forms part of the Cobden Club Series for 1870, the Permanent Settlement of 1793 was in its principles generally good and sound—the fixity of the money charge always excepted—and the men who helped to establish it were men of ripe experience and statesmanlike breadth of view. So far as the Settlement proved a failure, apart from its financial aspects, that failure was owing to subsequent breaches of the original provisions on the part of those who administered the province. The zemindars of Bengal may not be model landlords of the English breed, but as times go they are far from hard, as a rule, upon their tenantry. Except in Behar, they are not given to raising their rents, and the ryots on their part have generally made some profit out of their holdings.

Mr. Ross Mangles on the other hand has nothing at all to say in favour of the Perpetual Settlement. In his recent evidence before the Finance Committee he denounces the Bengal system as a huge mistake, unfair alike to the Government and the people. It was carried out in spite of the wiser counsels of Mr. Shore, at a time when the fearful famine which is said to have destroyed a third of the people of Bengal had turned large tracts of tillage into waste land, and greatly reduced the value of the land throughout the province. The protection promised to the ryots was never in fact granted, nor did the Government even reserve to itself the right to impose further taxes on the zemindars, to whom it gave away the people's birthright. One consequence of this ill-considered measure has been the levying of other taxes from the rest of the community, to make up for the financial drought caused by a settlement which made no provision for any subsequent rise in the value of land. How great that rise has been, Mr. Mangles showed by instancing one estate whose owner offered to let it for thirty-three times the amount of his rent due to the State. In like manner the Government have obtained very high prices for re-letting estates that have fallen into their hands. It was impossible, says Mr. Mangles, to exaggerate the recklessness and general faultiness of the Bengal Settlement. With regard to its financial demerits, he would even double the three millions a-year which Mr. Holt Mackenzie has set down as the money loss it inflicted on the Government. Mr. Mangles seems to us less happy in his reference to Lord Cornwallis's "strong opinions in favour of a landed aristocracy," and to the way in which that nobleman overrode the earnest remonstrances of Mr. John Shore. The fact, as Mr. Kaye well put it some twenty years ago, is that the Zemindarrie Settlement which Lord Cornwallis made perpetual in 1793 was ordained in 1789, after years of exhaustive inquiry, with the entire approval of Mr. Shore himself, who only demurred to any hasty perpetuation of a settlement concluded at first for ten years with the only body of men at that time available for the purpose. It was "emphatically the work of the Company's civil servants," and had "nothing whatever to do with the personal character" of its ostensible author.

The weak point of the Bengal Settlement, apart from any defects in carrying it out, was the fixing of the assessment for ever at one uniform money rental without any provision for the future rise in the price of those things for which the money assessment was taken as an equivalent. After eighty years of peaceful progress the State's share in the produce of the land must be worth at the present value of money many millions more than it was worth at the time of fixing the assessment. Had the amount of revenue claimable by the State been fixed at a certain proportion to the average price of grain from time to time, the perpetual character of the settlement would have been open to small objection. Its framers either overlooked so natural a precaution or greatly overrated the future productiveness of other fiscal resources. It seems hard to suppose that they would otherwise have deliberately made the Zemindars a present of several millions a-year, which would now have been easily available for such new sources of outlay as time inevitably engenders in a growing country. It is even now a moot question whether the terms of the Perpetual Settlement have not absolutely debarred the Bengal Government from levying any separate cess on the land for the making of roads or the education of the people. Some seven members of the Indian Council have at any rate recorded their dissent from the Indian Minister's decree in favour of an educational cess on the land, on the very ground that such a measure would be denounced by the Zemindars as a breach of faith, if even it should be found at all compatible in fact with the Regulations of 1793. A perpetual settlement under right conditions of flexibility would have saved Indian financiers from all the shifts to which they have lately been driven in order to make up for the mistakes of their predecessors. Such a settlement would differ in effect so little from the thirty years' settlement in Bombay, as to bear out the paradox advanced by Sir Bartle Frere, when he described the latter as "a perpetual tenure, reassessable every thirty years." It would secure fixity of tenure with a periodical readjustment of rents based on a fixed proportion of the net yearly value. One-half the net yearly rental is the share now taken by the State in all the newly settled provinces. By readjusting the money value of that half once every twenty or thirty years in the manner proposed by Sir Donald Macleod, we should get all the benefits of fixity of tenure without the drawbacks of a fixed money valuation.

OUR RELATIONS TO THE NATIVE STATES.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

Sir,—While considering that income-tax is objectionable on grounds peculiar to the East; that profit on the British manufacture, and the British smuggling, of opium is now precarious; and that forced extra cesses on the fixed land-tax are indefensible; some comments in the Times of India of last month have led me to read in Fraser's Magazine an "Indian Deficit" article, which is very justly reprobated by that journal as "seeking to suggest a sweeping scheme of spoliation and political treachery." The author scents the revenues of our allies and tributary princes. The large native garrison at Barrackpore may have accustomed him to suppose that all other cantonments are occupied in like strength, and thence to infer that "our present native army is enormous." He can hardly have had any experience of the routine of the outdoor duties of native infantry, even in time of peace and in quarters, or the wide dominions over which those duties extend. But he seems very familiar with the use of the sabre. Alleging that we have "alienated" (!) millions of revenue to the native States, he would retrieve that by increasing the European Army in India from 55,000 men to 65,000, so as to billet "a division of the Queen's Forces" on each of our allies and subsidiary States, and to subject their treasuries to cover the entire cost. He apprehends that "statesmen may feel a difficulty" in our treaties with those Powers; but "if that knot appears a serious entanglement," he "would recommend it be cut by an immediate declaration of war, while we have our hands free as now." The main difference between him and one whose deeds were chronicled by Marquis Wellesley, seems to be that the latter of the two heroes was guilty of no violation of compact, no breach of honour, when proclaiming that "throughout Hindostan all the sinful heretics will, with the utmost ease, become the prey of the swords of the combatants in the cause of religion; for the treachery and deceit of the Christians in the regions of Hindostan is beyond the power of belief." That process of surmounting a difficulty appeared to the Sultan "sufficiently simple," as this writer declares his commands for "cutting an entanglement" to be. But the former, in his arrogance, intrepidly perished. The latter, in his self-sufficiency, would, from a safe distance, imperil the safety of his countrymen.

The writer's remedy for Deficit is not devoid of other obstructions than the "knot" he would cut "with our own good sword." It is possible he may have grounds for stating that the Governor-general was compelled by the Home Government solely against his judgment to form subsidiary treaties. But, it is difficult to reconcile that assertion with the fact of that distinguished statesman having reported to the Home Government, that "the possession of their territories by the Chiefs being guaranteed to them is in every respect advantageous and honourable to the British Government, and strengthening ourselves by general defensive alliances." From the same high authority he might learn that a Governor-general, with much hard fighting actually on his hands in India, and while designing his expedition to capture the Mauritius, sought to raise his total of European Infantry, Royal and Local, for all India, and for expeditions beyond it, from 10,500 men to 18,000; but that the Minister of England replied, "your Lordships will be able to judge, from the above sketch of our military position, the difficulties I have had to contend with, in attempting to procure for India the reinforcements of force which I deem to be essential to our interests in that quarter." Thereupon, the entire strength determined, and accepted, was 1,920 Cavalry and 15,000 Infantry, including non-effectives. In the present situation of affairs in Europe, it is probable that, on inquiry at Whitehall, the writer would learn that the still larger reinforcements needed for his crusade could not easily be made available. He may then find some consolation in that which the Duke of Wellington wrote, when, with an accurate knowledge of its bearings on finance, he averred, of such absorption, that "it degrades and beggars the natives, and makes them all enemies."

Aspiring to display "India as it may be" in reference to native allies, the writer apparently does not at all comprehend the real position of any of them. For instance, he asserts dogmatically of Cashmere that, in default of any native candidate, a subsidiary prince was set up, who was as much a stranger as the King of Greece. Evidently he is in ignorance of its previous situation; of there having been no case of candidature; of the family of our nominee having been natives of that vicinity during seven centuries; of the services rendered to us by very able members of it long before the Sikh war, and during that struggle, and subsequently; and of the forecast of the British Government, then close at hand, and represented by men so circumspect and patriotic as Lord Hardinge and Sir Frederick Currie, when creating, in furtherance of our true interests, a Rajpoot Principality on the Mahommedan's flank, and conferring it on the loyal Goolaub Singh, a tried and brave old rajah. He would fain deprive his "Deficit" victims of all sympathy for their feeling and rights by vituperation, as coarse as it is groundless. His fearful mitrailleuse aims its ripping fire at all chiefs. His repertory of abuse is furnished partly from the stereotyped phrases of a newspaper patronised by Calcutta quidnuncs, and published in their Serampore parish; partly from the Billingsgate of his own fertile fancy. He denounces them all as "tyrants, spendthrifts, oppressive Princes, abominable scoundrels, always borrowing, tyrannising at pleasure, feeding paupers, maintaining hordes of native troops, rapacious, extravagant, maintaining private armies (whatever that may mean), with the vices, the pageantries, and the intrigues of paltry natives, their private luxuries, their personal luxuries, their recklessness, their abject indebtedness, their horrible flagrancy, their gross oppression and unpopularity, their indulging in feasts and fireworks, &c." These tirades recall to mind the virulent defamation of Germans disgracing the French press generally, and attorney Gambetta's mendacious placards in particular. If it gratifies this dealer in invective to devote his pen to such uses, one need not grudge him the pastime, though one cannot approve his taste. Such rhodomontade really injures no one. Some of our old allies will assuredly make merry over the grotesque attempt which malevolence has made to portray them; while listening lieges, less callous to the license of our press, will pull at the moustache with force fit to eradicate it.

Either the author's horizon may have been bounded by the ancient ditch of Calcutta, confining his intercourse and sympathy for the most part to the Masalchee class, and thus acquiring a foggy and a narrow view of the nature and extent of Hindostan, and of the real character and conduct of our allies and tributaries; or he may be of those who happily combine the enjoyment of large emoluments with the dolce far niente, under his "lunar government" amongst his "lunar models"—a designation suggested to his mind, no doubt, by the circumstance that they certainly do treat their "mundane subjects" de haut en bas—who dwell on the lofty ranges of this little planet and thus repose supine as nigh as possible to the heavenly orb. In the latter case this supreme arbiter, when some day descending from a region, where naturally there may be something of that "cloudiness" and "haziness" of which he complains as obscuring Indian questions, to the level of his "mundanes," may devise something more practical and less dishonest than his dragooning scheme. Those "mundanes" may now be often seen wistfully regarding the elevated abodes of their "lunar rulers;" and, maybe, they find some comfort in the saying, old as the earliest observation of the sublime sphere—"Stultus sicut luna mutatur." Meanwhile, the Finance Minister, if expecting to find consistency in him, will rely on one so devoid of scruple in disregarding solemn engagements with princes, to lend the cordial aid of his emphatic language in justifying the proposed exaction of additional revenue from those of our own subjects who have been such simpletons as to put faith in our promises that the settlement made with them was to be really permanent.

Some of the writer's crotchets might be dissipated were he to devote six months to close observation in and around the Punjab, say from April till September, when people and chiefs have leisure to converse with him; then, likewise, in Rohilkund; then in Goozerat and the South Mahratta country. With that experience he will have become aware that of princes there are good, bad, and inexperienced, as elsewhere in this world; the first entitled to our esteem, goodwill, and good faith; the second—and such only—deserving to be Mazzini'd; and the last susceptible of being led to a due sense of a ruler's responsibilities. He will observe that, generally speaking, there is nothing objectionable or unamiable in any class, excepting some religious absurdities. He will hear it said by everyone that, of all milch cows, none are so good and kind givers as the agricultural classes; and that we are their first masters who have ever been addicted to ride as well as milk them.

Your space would not admit of observations on his "other branch of the subject." But it may be noticed that it is merely another peg on which to hang his execration of princes; and that, of the fallacies pervading his pages, not the least of them is his charging the Liberal party with backsliding, in approving Lord Canning's sanction of the right of adoption, and so "seeing the prince and not the peasant;" whereas, the truth is notorious that, throughout the Native States, it was the people as much as, or more, than the princes who were mortified and resentful at the right being withheld from their ruling houses. Our cupidity in appropriating the highly cultivated province of Sattara, and our intolerance in rudely disregarding the Rajah's feeling of sacred obligation to adopt an heir to rule over his prosperous and contented subjects, astounded and disgusted them, from the highest to the lowest. And the demise of the childless Dowlut Rao Sindhia of Gwalior, who could not make up his mind to select a successor, and who did not—though urged to do so by the British Resident at his bedside, by orders of the British Government—exhibits, as reported by that distinguished officer, a touching scene in the manifestation of an attached people's anxiety to effect an adoption, notwithstanding their dying chief's indifference.—Yours obediently, H. H.

THE INDIAN BUDGET.

The Englishman thinks there is so much in Sir Richard Temple's Budget statement to vindicate him from the charges of incompetence and indifference to public opinion which have been brought against him, that it the more regrets the traces of past error and obstinacy which still remain to mar it. As a mere arithmetical exposition of Indian finances, past and prospective, the statement is perhaps as perfect as the most sedulous care and the most indefatigable industry could make it. Yet, after all, the Budget is a triumph of arithmetic rather than of statesmanship, or even of financial skill. There is still the same infertility of invention, still the same want of all attempt to grapple with the problem of Indian finance in any but a hand-to-mouth manner, which have characterised Sir Richard Temple's previous Budgets, and, in justice to him we must admit, those of his predecessors in office. And, what is still more deplorable, the retention of the income-tax without the usual limit as to time, at two pie in the rupee, suggests reasonable ground for apprehension that it is to this tax, and to it alone, that Sir Richard Temple looks as the source upon which the Government of India must in future draw whenever the ordinary revenue of the country happens to fall short of the sum it determines to expend. The practical result is not difficult to foresee. This year Sir Richard Temple estimated opium at Rs. 975 per chest, and he had to impose an income-tax of 3½ per cent. to cover the anticipated deficiency. For the coming year he estimates opium at Rs. 1,075 per chest, and we have an income-tax of 1 1-24th per cent. So in future we may make up our minds that low prices of opium mean a heavy income-tax, and high prices of opium only a temporary relaxation of the pressure. In the meantime nothing is being done to develop any new source of revenue, so that if some day opium should entirely fail us, or, as is very probable, undergo a much more serious depreciation of value than any which has yet occurred, we may expect the income-tax to be raised to a rate which may drive the country into rebellion. We have no hesitation in saying that this is a state of things so unsound and so pregnant with danger that no prudent statesman would tolerate it a moment longer than was absolutely unavoidable. So far from retaining the income-tax at a nominal rate to meet future exigencies, he would see in that impost the worst of all instruments for the purpose in view, because it is a tax the enhancement of which is absolutely certain to cause the most serious discontent. The great defect of the Budget, then, is that not only is this vicious impost retained—we care not, so far as the principle is concerned, at how low a rate—but no proof is furnished of the desire to get rid of it, and substitute in its place sources of revenue which may be utilised in a greater or less degree without creating serious political danger. On the contrary, by seeking legislative sanction for the tax for an indefinite period, Sir Richard Temple destroys any hope which might have been entertained that he was conscious of the importance of having something better to rely upon. Sir Richard Temple argues that without the tax he would have had to budget for a deficit of about half a million sterling; and, taking the figures he has given, it is of course obvious that simply to deduct the estimated proceeds of the tax from the receipts would be to create a deficit of that amount. But to say that a deficit must, therefore, have been budgeted for is to assume that there is no way of saving £500,000 on the other side of the account, and no other way of providing it but by an income-tax, the one of which propositions is open to serious doubt, and the other simply incredible. The whole tenour of the Budget, however, assumes both these propositions, and goes to show that Sir Richard Temple is content to believe further economy to be impossible, and further provision of revenue to be possible in only one way. Truly, if this is the case, the condition of Indian finance is deplorable, and the prospects of British rule in India are gloomy indeed.

The Friend of India holds that when the Government was making a concession to the popular feeling it ought to have been done gracefully—graciously. Mr. Disraeli was not far wrong the other day in saying that when the Fenians were liberated from prison (he disputed the policy of the liberation) the amnesty should have been complete. One wonders indeed how it was that a man like Mr. Gladstone should have made such an unaccountable blunder as to forgive and at the same time banish. It was not, however, half as bad a blunder as Sir Richard Temple's, in defending, while he was remitting, the income-tax, and in using words which seemed to indicate that he would be much readier to bring back the tax to 3½ per cent. than he was in reducing it to the rate which it ought to have been his pride and pleasure to announce. There is a great deal in the fact of governing men having the sympathy and goodwill of the governed; a great deal in convincing people that a statesman is ready and willing to recede from any position, the moment he is convinced that that position is wrong, and that no position can possibly be maintained when it is strongly opposed to the national feeling. For our own part we are as firmly convinced as Sir Richard Temple that direct taxation is the most rational taxation, but we are also convinced that if the taxation of England were direct taxation there would be a revolution in a week. Apart from theories, there is not the slightest question that some of the highest work of statesmanship in modern times has been to spread taxation over a larger surface, so that the weight might not rest heavily on any particular part. We should have liked to hear Sir Richard Temple say that he believed in the principle of the income-tax (as we suppose he does), but that the proofs were so ample that an income-tax was unsuited to India that he would accept the practical fact in the face of the more perfect theory, and give a kind of assurance to the people that whatever else the Financial Department might be compelled to fall back upon, it would not readily fall back upon an income-tax. It was evident, however, that Sir Richard Temple could not take this view. All the criticism of his financial position he seems to have stored up in his memory with the intention of making this triumphant exposition at the proper time. It is little. It is not statesmanlike. It is not prudent. It spoiled a budget that ought to have been a good one. The great feature, of course, in the Budget is the decentralisation scheme, which we trust will be carefully considered by the Council with a view to amendment of detail. The principle, however, will hardly need much discussion. It is apparent at once to common sense; and the other principle which has been recently advocated by some distinguished men is so clearly one that would break up the Empire into fragments as to be almost beyond discussion.

THE FINANCIAL POSITION.

The Indian Economist thinks that upon the whole the financial prospects of the new year are bright, and although it does not itself feel at liberty to urge the total abolition of the income-tax, the fact that the opposition to it is universal and bitter should have great weight in the eyes of Government. "The true end of legislation," says Edmund Burke, "is to follow, not to force, public inclination. It would be dreadful, indeed, if there was any power in the nation capable of resisting its unanimous desire, or even the desire of any very great and decided majority of the people. The people may be deceived in their choice of an object, but I can scarcely conceive any choice they can make to be so very mischievous as the existence of any human force capable of resisting it. When Government and the people differ Government is generally in the wrong." So, too, in 1772, when speaking on a Bill respecting the import and export of corn, the profound and eloquent statesman said,—"I give way to the present Bill not because I approve of the measure in itself, but because I think it prudent to yield; . . . the people will have it so, and it is not for their representatives to say nay." These words embody such profound wisdom that we would press them upon Lord Mayo's notice. There can be no doubt whatever that the people are opposed as one man to the income-tax. Well, whether they are right or wrong is no longer the question. "The proper business of a statesman," says Mr. Buckle, "is to contrive the means by which certain ends may be effected, leaving to the general voice of the country to determine what those ends shall be, and shaping his own conduct, not according to his own principles, but according to the wishes of the people for whom he legislates, and whom he is bound to obey." With whatever limitations we may hold this doctrine in India, the passage embodies a great principle for the statesman's guidance. Feeble and shallow men spend their little force in resisting the popular wish till they find themselves at length compelled to yield in the midst of deserved odium, where a statesman, by prompt and graceful concession, puts himself at the head of the movement, for that guidance and control which are at once granted him by popular acclaim. Lord Mayo has done a wise thing in the issue of the late Financial Resolution. We think he would be well advised were he now, without sinking, or professing to sink, his own convictions, to repeal the income-tax in deference to what is plainly the universal wish.

MILITARY MISMANAGEMENT.

The Times of India asks how it comes that in these days regiments would appear to be specially found for officers, and not officers for regiments. As the Bombay Army is now administered, we have seen seven hundred men handed over like so many sheep to this or that hungry claimant, without regard to his qualifications to command. Favouritism or arbitrary selection does everything now-a-days, and without special influence at head-quarters, influence, too, of a character we had rather not characterise. The line of demarcation between civil and military employ is now much more broad than it was before; so when the truant officer returns to military duty he finds himself a fish out of water. Changes have taken place in the system of duties, of pay, accounts, and drill; and when native officers go for orders or take up any case, they find that the European officer whom they expect to stamp with his individuality everything connected with duty in the regiment, is a helpless cipher. It may be urged that this will not last long, that in course of time the European officer will regain a knowledge of his duty. This may be true in part, but during this "course of time" discipline must suffer, not, perhaps, the discipline which suppresses crime, but the discipline which makes the natives look up with regard and trust to their European leader. Moreover, it has been seen from experience that this "course of time" is a long one. Whether from the effects of climate, or the difference of manner in which the mind is taxed, officers who have been long in civil employ find it very difficult to retain the different minutiæ of drill, orders, &c., the retention of which goes to make a good officer. Nor is the above the only way in which the officering of the native army is disregarded at army head-quarters. What Lord Napier of Magdala tried so much to effect, viz. to have old officers with their old regiments, is put aside. Let us give an instance or two. Colonel Ewen Grant, who can show more war service than any other officer in the Bombay Army, who fought at Nuffoosk, at Mooltan and Goozerat, served in the Crimea, in Persia, in the Mutinies, and in China, must have expected on Colonel Campbell's death to get the command of the 3rd Regiment N.I., his old regiment. Instead of this, he, a man of thirty-two years' service, was given the "acting second in command" of the 22nd Regiment N.I.! Take again an instance in the 22nd Regiment N.I. Lieutenant-Colonel Campbell, acting second in command, left the 22nd for furlough in July, 1870. The late Major P. Hodgson was appointed for a month or so, during which time Colonel Scott, the second in command, was appointed to the command of the 3rd Regiment N.I. Properly speaking, Lieutenant-Colonel Campbell should have been appointed to the vacancy, and then Major Hodgson to the Wing Officership. But no; that did not recommend itself to Bombay Headquarters. Colonel Hewett was appointed, remained till October, 1870, was transferred to the 24th N.I., and succeeded by Colonel Grant; Colonel Grant has now been transferred to the 13th N.I. as second in command. Now we see that in the short space of five months a body of 350 men has been bandied about amongst half-a-dozen officers. Is it too much to say that under such a state of things a proper bond of union between officers and men is impossible?

Decentralisation.—Mr. George Campbell has begun vigorously. A searching investigation of the local estimates has shown that no provincial taxation will be involved by the deficit of £87,591, which the Decentralisation Scheme left to be made good by Bengal. The increased power of adjustment and control which this measure vests in the local Government has enabled it to introduce a new spirit of economy throughout ten important branches of its administration, and the £87,591 will be made up from savings, without impairing the departmental efficiency, and without local taxation of any sort.—Englishman.

Prince Kassai's Mission.—Our readers will not fail to notice the remarkable confirmation of our arguments regarding the home accounts, furnished by the telegram which we published yesterday morning, concerning the expenses of Prince Kassai's embassy to England, and which was received long after our article on the subject was written. What possible connection, geographical or political, exists between India and Abyssinia we cannot imagine. If it is because the Abyssinians are an Eastern people, then it becomes a question whether India would not be equally liable to pay the expenses of a Caffre or a Hottentot embassy. Indeed, it becomes as desirable in the interests of Indian tax-payers generally to draw a hard and fast line between East and West, as it is in those of the Cachar planters to define the boundary within which Government accepts the responsibility of protecting its subjects. We would suggest, however, that the expenses of the Tigre Embassy might much more justly be charged to the inhabitants of the Cape or of the Mauritius.—Englishman, March 14.

SIR R. TEMPLE'S BUDGET STATEMENT.

Sir R. Temple summed up the contents of his Budget in these words :—

Such is the exposition which I have this day to offer. The main points have been—

That for 1869-70, instead of an anticipated deficit of £625,594, there has been an actual surplus of £118,668 ;

That for 1870-71 the surplus estimated in the Budget at £163,440 is now estimated at £997,100, or one million ;

That this surplus is really due to an unlooked for accession of opium revenue ;

That without this accession of opium revenue there would have been little more than an equilibrium between income and ordinary expenditure ;

That for 1871-72 there is estimated a small surplus of income over ordinary expenditure of £93,400 ; that this estimate is arrived at after a large abatement of the income-tax ; the lowest incomes assessable, namely, those between Rs. 750 and 500 being exempted altogether, and the rates for all classes being lowered from 3⅓ to a fraction above one per cent. ;

That this change in the income-tax causes reduction of 1⅓ million of direct taxation ;

That the exemption of incomes between Rs. 750 and Rs 500 reduces the total number of persons assessed, 480,000, by fully one-half, and releases 240,000 taxpayers ;

That the ordinary expenditure for the coming year shows a decrease of one million of expenditure as compared with the current year ;

That subject to certain conditions, an increased financial control has been entrusted to the several local Governments in respect of jails, registration, police, education, medical services, printing, roads other than military, and civil buildings ;

That the grants by the General Treasury for these services have been reduced by £331,038, and that a fixed limit is imposed on the imperial expenditure on these departments ;

That for these provincial services throughout India, allotments have been made of four and three quarter millions, distributed among the various local Governments ;

That apart from the allotments made to the local Governments under these provincial services for roads and buildings, the ordinary Public works grant in India has been brought down to two and one-half millions ;

That three and a-half millions have been raised by loan in England since my last statement was made, while only a little above one million has been expended on public works extraordinary ;

That three and a-half millions are proposed to be spent on public works extraordinary during the coming year 1871-72, two and one-third millions being provided for by loan ;

That owing to the improvements in the account of the income and ordinary expenditure of Government, and the temporary diminution of expenditure on public works extraordinary and on construction of the guaranteed railways, the cash balances in India are very high, and that no loan is proposed in this country ;

That during the current year various measures relating to finance have been carried out, such as the coinage of ten-rupee and five-rupee gold pieces ; the legalisation of a five-rupee note in the paper currency ; the introduction of district savings banks in the interior of the country.

I must now conclude my exposition. If it be found (as I fear it will) meagre and imperfect in many respects, still I hope the Council will remember that my subject is really too varied and extensive to be fully treated in all its particulars within the limits of the patience of my hearers. At all events, within these necessary limits, I have striven to compress as many facts and considerations as possible.

In 1869 I spoke of flourishing revenue and growing commerce. In 1870 the burden of my story was diminished income and depressed trade. In 1871, however, I have now once more to tell of national prosperity, of abundant harvests, of rising income, of falling expenditure, of improved public credit. In two successive expositions (1869 and 1870) I have had to lament the existence of deficit. But on this occasion, in my third exposition, the picture is at last relieved by the prospect of surplus. The Council knows what strenuous exertions have been made to obtain equilibrium and even surplus. Those efforts seem at this moment likely to be attended with even more success than we at first ventured to hope for.

In 1869 I affirmed that the Government of India had aimed at a financial policy to be at once safe, sound, and just. Since then two years of trial and labour have passed, and I affirm once more that the same principles have been strictly observed, notwithstanding that the observance caused much trouble and difficulty.

We have maintained a strict distinction as to what expenditure shall, and what shall not, be considered extraordinary to be provided for by loan. All expenditure, however beneficial, not yielding a direct pecuniary return has been classed as ordinary expenditure. We have resolved that, so far as may be possible, the whole of the ordinary expenditure of each year shall be defrayed from the revenues of that year. We have jealously guarded against everything that might tend to shift the burden of these just charges from the present to the future. We have steadily refrained from providing by loan for any branch of ordinary expenditure or for any public work not yielding direct pecuniary return. We have even refused to entertain proposals for temporary or terminable loans for such purposes. In preference to any such course, the alternative of enhancing the existing taxation has been adopted. But that taxation has been so adjusted as to fall rather on the richer than the poorer classes of this country. Though the revenue has been augmented, yet no fresh burden whatever has been imposed on any branch of trade or of industry ; no new imperial tax has been introduced ; no fiscal innovation has been applied to British India generally. In so far as any fresh tax may be needed in any part of India, the disposition has been to rely on local rather than imperial arrangements.

Retrenchments in both the civil and military branches of expenditure in India have been made. To afford further relief, the expenditure on ordinary public works has been cut down by more than one-third. Strict economy in details has been enforced by the Government of India and by the local Governments. The better enforcement of economy was one of the reasons for investing the local Governments with increased financial control in several departments. That measure also has been commenced by a further reduction of one-third of a million of expenditure.

On the other hand, liberality has been shown in the provision by loan for public works of an extraordinary and reproductive character. But this operation has been so far guarded financially, in that the interest on the borrowed capital is charged against ordinary revenues.

MADAME INDIA'S SCHOOL-BOARD.

Meeting on March 9th, held at the Office, Government House, Calcutta, to receive annual report, &c., &c.

Present :—Dr. Mayo, in the chair, and all the members.

Dr. Mayo, in opening the meeting said,—"I have occupied this chair steadily during the past year, and I congratulate myself and you, members, on the progress we have made. Perhaps the best course for me as chairman to take will be to notice the unpleasant matters first. I wanted some nice roads made in your different school-grounds, and also some nice homes built for your guardians ; and as the matter seemed to me so simple, I asked Mr. Richard, your master of engineering, to do this. Mr. Richard, I am sorry to say, has not succeeded in this as well as he might have done, and as none of the roads are yet finished, and as the buildings are, I believe, all tumbling down, I asked him how this was. He says he made the works over to some of the boys, who have at present nothing to do, and that they did very badly, and did not seem to take much interest in their works, although he gave them more pay. Mr. Richard gave me the names of three boys who did very bad work. I have turned them out of their school. They now say they were engaged to fight, not to do bricklayer's work, so I have told them to go and fight. Mr. Richard seems tired of all this, and is going home to buy some nice little engines and carriages for the toy railways I am going to make for you to look at in your playground ; but who the dickens I am to put in Mr. Richard's place. I don't know. Talking of these nice little playthings, the railways I am going to make, I got the other day from one of the schools a pamphlet on them by T. W. A., M. I. C. E. Now I don't like jokes of any kind, but I understand Scotch, and I fancy he means two mice might pull the carriages on these railways, and as I said before, I don't like joking on serious matters. Well, for making these little railways, and roads and buildings, I require a little money, so I asked the most insinuating of you and the master (at least he is supposed to be) of finance to arrange for some money from the boys, who I thought, would all help to beautify and improve their playgrounds. Mr. Dick, I have no doubt, did his best, and hit on a plan which would scarcely have struck any one else. I, as you know, allow all the boys just enough pocket-money for them to live on comfortably (you of course being masters are better off), and it struck him if I cut them all three and one-eighth per cent. they will never know it or feel it. Didn't they jest. I am a Dr. you know. Well, one day one boy came to me and said he wanted to have his throat lengthened a three and one-eighth of its length. I looked at the boy and thought he must have gone mad. He at once said Mr. Dick has cut three and one-third from my beer, and I thought if you could lengthen my throat three and one-eighth I would taste what was left so much longer that we would be quits. I patted the boy on the head, and told him I was sorry I could not help him. I have told Mr. Dick to find some other way of getting money, and he has promised to do his best ; he says he will tell you himself what he proposed later in the day.

"One very bad boy was so impertinent to me that I have told all the boys to cut him dead, not to speak or salute him until he learns better manners. The best master I had I am sorry to say was killed by an accident. I wish you were all like him. Another good master of a branch school, Mr. William, wants to go home, and won't work ever longer. He has always done his duty, and more than his duty. Mr. George, who used to be in charge of one of the small schools, is to succeed him, and will always take care that all his boys are well fed and cared for. If ever there is a bad dinner or no dinner at all, Mr. George is great at reports, and will soon convince the whole school in one of them that they have all eaten a first-rate dinner, and that if they have not, there is no one to blame or censure. Mr. George, I am told, begins by shaking everything up, but I am sorry to say generally gets sick before everything settles. However, all he does is well done—even the shaking up!"

Dr. Mayo said he had little more to add, "As they had all worked well during the past year, and the boys had behaved in all their schools very well. One thing, however, he hoped, that before this meeting closed Mr. Dick would explain if he intended to cut the boy's allowance next year; and Mr. Richard, if he intended to make roads which would be finished, and buildings that would stand."

Mr. Dick said at that late hour he would not detain the meeting by a long speech; what he intended to do next year was, that neither boys nor masters would be cut anything from their allowance for pocket-money, but he intended to charge more for all the luxuries of life.

Mr. Richard said he could not build good buildings, or roads, or railways, without good men, and good men required good pay, so he intended to get rid of all useless men and to pay the men whom he kept on much better salaries than they now got, and to expect from them the best of work. He added that in the new college at home the high charge of £150 a-year would prohibit any but men well off from sending their sons into the Public Works Department, and that gentlemen were really as much wanted in it as engineers. The meeting then adjourned until next meeting.—Pioneer.

Miscellaneous.

Death of Lieutenant Spottiswoode.—Lieutenant Lambert Lovelay Spottiswoode, 107th Regiment, was drowned on the 6th March, while bathing in a tank at Dum-Dum.

Civil.—Mr. Saunders, C.B., resident at Hyderabad, goes home shortly on leave. Major Tweedie, the first assistant, will, it is said, officiate during his absence. Major Tweedie is an able political officer, and a fortunate.

Lord Mayo and Brigham Young.—In claiming the acquaintance of Lord Mayo, Brigham Young appears, says the Englishman, to have rendered the Viceroy an honour that was not his due. The letter of introduction which Mr. Seward brought to his Excellency from the Mormon leader was the result of a mistake on the part of the latter, in having confounded Viscount Milton with Lord Mayo.

Ameer Khan.—The case against Ameer Khan and Hushmadao Khan (alleged Wahabees), before the Joint Magistrate of Patna, is now complete. The 23rd of March has been fixed for the examination of a couple of witnesses against whom warrants are out; but whether these witnesses are present or not, it is expected that the preliminary enquiry will be concluded on that or the following day.

Public Works Department.—The Civil Engineers of the Public Works Department are about to again memorialise the Secretary of State with reference to leave, pension, and status, with which object two meetings have lately been held in Calcutta and a working committee has been formed. A draft memorial is now in circulation amongst their body for consideration and suggestions.

Mr. W. Seward.—The Hon. W. H. Seward, who was to have left Calcutta on Friday night (10th March) for Benares, proposes, says the Pioneer, to visit Allahabad, Cawnpore, Lucknow, Agra, and Delhi, returning via Jubbulpore to Bombay, so as to reach that port during the first week in April en route to Europe and America. Mr. Seward is to be the guest of the Lieutenant-Governor during his short stay in Allahabad.

Indian Chess.—Some persons think that the manner of playing the game of chess, so familiar to all in the East, differs greatly from the modifications applied to it in the West, and that the Europeans and Americans have considerably altered the original Hindu rules of the game. Such, however, is by no means the case, and anyone who plays in the Indian or Mohammedan fashion can very easily adapt his playing to the European method.—Native Opinion, March 11.

The Pattiala Rajah.—His Highness the Maharajah of Pattiala left Calcutta on the evening of March 15 by the nine o'clock train. He was attended by an escort, and his own numerous suite. The salute due to his rank was fired yesterday morning. The Daily News says:—"Since his arrival in Calcutta he has gained golden opinions from all sorts of people, and most certainly carries away with him the kindest remembrances of many friends for his courtesy and urbanity."

The Railway Gauge.—The Pioneer, in the following passage, confirms our own impression of the facts:—"We regret to notice that Sir Richard appears to be misinformed about the railway gauge question. He affirms that this has now been definitively settled. But we have the best reason to know that this is not the case, and that what Sir Richard believes to be the final view of the Government of India is about to become the subject of a keen discussion in the Council at home."

The Concert at Calcutta.—Letters from Calcutta are ecstatic, says the Pioneer, regarding the concert given on Tuesday by the Maharajah of Puttiala to the Earl and Countess of Mayo and the upper ten hundred of Calcutta. It is true Lady Mayo was unfortunately prevented from attending. The scene, however, was very brilliant, the concert extremely good, the supper excellent. The flow of soul was ministered to by the full strength of the opera company, and the less etherial tastes by the Great Eastern Hotel Company. Supper was laid for nine hundred guests.

Commissariat Mismanagement at Peshawar.—We are informed by the Delhi Gazette that the committee of enquiry into recent abuses and mismanagement in the Commissariat Department at Peshawar will consist of the following officers:—Lieutenant Colonel Thelwal, C.B., of Peshawar; Lieutenant Colonel T. H. Chamberlain, of Lucknow; and Major R. Davidson, of Cawnpore. It is reported (adds the same paper) that this enquiry is likely to reveal some important facts proving the gross mismanagement of this important department of the military service. The committee will assemble at Peshawar about the 15th inst.

Legislative.—At the usual weekly meeting of the Viceregal Legislative Council, on the 10th March, Mr. Strachey got leave to introduce a Bill to provide for the levy of rates on land in Oude. Mr. Inglis also obtained leave to introduce a Bill for imposing a duty on certain trades and dealings in the North-Western Provinces and Oude, and to introduce a Bill to provide for the levy on land of rain to be applied to local purposes in the North-Western Provinces. Mr. Stephen was permitted to introduce a Bill to repeal Act No. V. of 1841 (for the greater uniformity of the process upon trials for States offences, and the amendment of such process in certain cases); and Mr. Chapman to introduce a Bill to provide for the survey of steam vessels in the port of Rangoon. Mr. Strachey introduced the Bill to consolidate and amend the law relating to advances of money by the Government for the improvement of land. The Bill to consolidate the law relating to the emigration of native labourers was passed.

Military.—The Pioneer does not think it is intended to fill up Colonel Crommelin's appointment, at any rate before Colonel Dickens's return. It is indeed probable that the office of Inspector-General of Military Works will, on Colonel Crommelin's departure, cease to exist in its present form, and that a way will be found to distribute its duties among the existing head quarters staff of the D.P.W. with a gain in economy and without loss of efficiency.—A rumour that the 25th brigade of Royal Artillery is to be broken up immediately has reached the Pioneer, which remarks, "We cannot vouch for its truth but the question of breaking up this particular brigade has been to know, again and again on the tapis. The general force of artillery will not be diminished by this reduction, as the men will be distributed among the other brigades — but it is probable that the staff will suffer."—On the departure of the Viceroy for the Upper Provinces, the Hon. General Norman, C.B., will, it is said, proceed to Burmah, where he will visit most of the chief stations.—It is believed that Colonel T. Wright, of the 11th Bengal Cavalry, will succeed Colonel T. F. Wilson, C.B., as Deputy Adjutant-General.

The Ameer of Kabul.—No one, so far as we are aware, has ever yet said that the Ameer of Affghanistan drinks. At the same time, if such an extraordinary statement were made, the Ameer's utterances could hardly be adduced as proof to the contrary. His Highness has lately been soliloquising, and the text of his soliloquy was this:—Shah Nevaz Khan, a powerful Sirdar, resolved to go to Meshed, a sort of Mecca in its way. A party of sowars waylaid him, whether with the cognisance of the Ameer or not we are not informed; but it must be said that the conduct of his Highness has not of late been above suspicion. Shah Nevaz Khan fought well, killed two, wounded four, and sent the rest to the right about. But he was pursued and overtaken when "going to take rest and refreshment under the shade of a tree." He sprang into his saddle and "baffled pursuit." His pursuers returned to Herat. The Governor of Herat was wroth, and sent off eight footmen and fifteen horsemen ("four-and-twenty men and five-and-fifty pipers") to apprehend the swift Sirdar. But whether they did so remains to be seen. Yet the Ameer fully appreciated Futteh Mahomed Khan's prompt action, and the Cabul Court lavished great praises upon the Governor of Herat for this kind act of his." Then the Ameer:—"By God, if all my relatives and all the members of my family come up to me and offer true submission, I will allow them all to live peacefully in my dominions. You all know well that the whole of the world, and especially the English of the Punjab and India, praise me highly for my kind behaviour. Fateh Mahomed Khan was an inveterate enemy of mine and ever thirsted for my blood; but at last, when he could not get a refuge anywhere else, he came up to me, and notwithstanding his being a rival of mine, professed sincere submission. What did his enmity towards me avail him, but his appearing before me as one of my lowest servants. Now I am very much pleased with his services, and confess that were there a few more such men in my service my dominions would have been far more prosperous and thickly peopled. By God, if Shah Nevaz Khan come up to me with a sincere and frank heart, I will treat him as a son of mine, although he is a rival for the throne. What has he gained by my enmity, but prostrating himself before the King of Persia—and exciting such an hatred of his own relatives in my kingdom towards him that they never care even to hear about him? Indeed, I abhor such a state of things very much. Mahomed Yakoob Khan, my foolish son, whom I mistook to be wise and dutiful, roused my anger whilst in the perfect enjoyment of peace, and now if I do get him by any means, I will order him to be instantly tied up to a gun and blown to pieces."

IMPORTS.—CALCUTTA, March 15.—Since the termination of the native holidays, a moderate amount of business has been transacted, though at still unremunerative prices. The demand is now more general, and such goods as were before inactive now begin to figure more largely in the list of transactions. In the most staple articles, however, such as Shirtings and Twist, dealers continue to act with great caution, and this will probably be the case until we have more encouraging news from the home markets. Grey Shirtings: Light makes, say up to 6 lbs., are wanted, and are readily saleable at quotations. In 7 lbs. and 8½ lbs. business is very quiet, and dealers only buy to supply existing wants. Mulls, both grey and white, continue in good demand, and last quotations have been slightly improved upon. Grey Jaconets: Low makes are still in fair request at firm rates. White Jaconets: Low to medium qualities are rather more saleable, without change in prices. Madapollams and T-Cloths dull, and prices lower. Grey Twist, 40's, have declined to a very low point, but there is now more inclination to do business at these low rates. Other numbers are very quiet. Coloured Twist: Market is very inactive.

EXPORTS.—CALCUTTA, March 15.—Saltpetre: The news of peace on the Continent has caused a still further decline in the price for Saltpetre this week, and the high rates of freight have also tended to check business. Crude 5 per cent. refraction sold at Rs. 7-1; Cawnpore Refined at Rs. 6-15, and Common from 7 to 15 per cent. refraction at Rs. 6-12 to 8-8, without guarantee. The stock of Furruckabad has slightly increased, but of other qualities there are only about 900 tons in the market. Rice: There has been a rise of about 2 annas for best middling for English shipment, but, on the whole, very little business has been done. The accounts from Burmah represent the present season's crop as likely to be a very large one, so prices may be expected to decline shortly. Linseed: The holders of old stocks being anxious to clear off their supplies to make room for the new crop, which is likely to be a heavy one, prices have again fallen during the week, but the high rate of freights has prevented many transactions even with the fall in price. Quotations range from Rs. 4-7-6 for good bold, to Rs. 4 for small and mixed. Rapeseed: The new Bengal crop is coming in in large quantities, but prices have been fully maintained, owing to unfavourable reports from the North-West Provinces. There has been a considerable business transacted during the week for Europe at—for yellow, Rs. 4-10 to 4-7-6; brown and mixed, Rs. 4-2 to 3-12. Teelseed: There have been few arrivals this week, and, the stocks being small as well as the new crop, prices have been fully maintained. We quote the rate from Rs. 5-4 to 4. Poppy seed: The rate continues firm at from Rs. 4-4 to 4, but little business has been done, owing to the last year's crop being nearly exhausted, and the new crop not coming into the market till May. Jute: Owing to less demand, prices have fallen somewhat during the week. The unsold stock in hand is estimated at about 20,000 bales, and the daily arrivals average about 1,000 bales. Prices per maund may be quoted at Rs. 6 to 4-12 for fine to low Serajgunge, Rs. 5-4 to 4-12 for fine to low Dacca, and Rs. 28 per bale for Double Triangle K. Raw Silk: The sales during the past week have consisted of only 25 bales of native Cossimbazar and Jungipore at from Rs. 20 to 21. The favourable reports of the March bund prevent operations at the present prices, and a fall is expected. Stocks in hand about 700 bales native Cassimbazar. Silk Piece Goods: Corahs have declined on receipt of the news of a fall in the London market. They are quoted, with but little demand, at from Rs. 132 to 170 per corge.

SIR SALAR JUNG ON GOVERNMENT.

Sir Salar Jung has been lately visiting some portions of the Hyderabad territory, and when at the city of Beder a meeting was called of officials and the principal inhabitants by the desire of his Excellency. On this occasion the following speech (printed in the vernacular official Gazette of Hyderabad, and translated in the columns of our local contemporary) was made by him, a large assembly of zemindars, vatandars, and a number of H. H. Government servants being present. His Excellency said:—

"This day I have great pleasure to see so many present here. The main object of my getting you assembled is that I, who am one of the servants of H. H. the Nizam, may speak a few words of encouragement to two classes especially—Government servants and landholders. It is well known in these days that strict orders have been issued for the better conserving of the rights of the people. Those who possess sunnuds of their land property, &c., if such documents are not illegal, have no fear of being depriyed of their rights. Some such illegal documents exist, and they had their origin, I consider, from the talukdars and naibs of the talukas, either on account of their dishonesty and covetousness, or on account of the bad rule that prevailed in former times. But, by the providence of God, a stop is now put to that state of things, and that what remains of wrong will, I hope, disappear in the process of time. When there is a sudden stop put to wrongs which have their origin in the past, some people may suffer, but it ought to be rightly perceived that it is not an affliction, because oppression and theft are two great sins. When people learn to act honestly and be industrious, they will reap the benefit of labour. Some of the results will be, an increase in the annual production; they will derive a taste for the acquisition of knowledge, which is a chief thing, and which they need much; and let those who have limited means of support, exert themselves to cultivate waste land, and thus give rise to trade, by which both they and H.H.'s Government will be benefited and reap great reward themselves. Now, I wish to add, that Government servants should take to heart their responsibility, and exert themselves in their duties with zeal — prevent illegal courses, and in every way assist the people in objects that will honestly benefit them. Unfortunately the Government officials of his Highness, in too many cases, do not attempt to do more than examine accounts and sign papers; but it is necessary that they should be well acquainted wrth the condition of the people of the talukas under them, and it should be their aim to improve the state of the people, also by kind advice lead them into paths of industry, and aid their welfare. Whatever the nature of complaints, and from whomsoever, the investigation should be impartial and just. Subordinates must consider it their duty to respect their superiors, and earnestly do their work.

"Mr. Rustomjee Viccajee, an able, energetic, and faithful servant of H.H. the Nizam's Government, who is appointed to this zilla, also the first talukdar, the second, and third, the Madadga-ri-Adalat, and other Government officials, will, I hope, exert themselves in their work with zeal, so that, when I find an opportunity of re-visiting this zilla, I may be able to praise God for the improvement and prosperity of the country. I hope that H.H. the Nizam will, in the process of time, come to this part of his territory, and see the doings of his servants here and at other zillas."

Rustomjee Viccajee, Esq., the Sudder Talukdar of the Zilla of Beder, then spoke as follows:—

"The hearty wish for the prosperity of the country is evidently seen from what his Excellency has just been pleased to state to us. The ignoble acts of the zemindars and others are from time immemorial, and H. E. has told us that such will no doubt in due time be abated. I need hardly mention that from a remote period up to the time of H. H. Nawub Nizam Ali Khan, the great works made are in excellent condition; they also bear evidence to the high cultivation and intelligence of past times; some great specimens of engineering are to be seen in nearly every zilla of H. H.'s dominions. As time passed on, the art and science of that age declined. After the time of H. H. Nizam Ali Khan, there was much corruption in the State, so much so that the appellation of mooglai was applied to it—such things have existed for half a century. Now the welfare of H. H.'s dominions is entrusted to H. E. Sir Salar Jung, whereby the corruption that had prevailed so long has disappeared. Other beneficial changes have been effected. During the past fifty years most of the Government officials were so ignorant, that when they had occasion to sign their names they used to make a mark. Schools have been established, and the children of the poorest people are now taught."

Miscellaneous.

The Vizianagram Rajah.—About a year ago the Maharajah of Vizianagram promised a contribution of Rs. 10 000 for the erection of a water fountain in a conspicuous part of Madras. The Maharajah's fountain has arrived by the ship Blue Bell.

Military.—Major-general Shubrick, Acting Commander-in-Chief of the Madras Army, was expected at Madras on the 1st March to take his oaths in the Council Chamber of Fort St. George. He would, it was believed, be sworn in as Member of Council at the same time.

A Strange Official.—Let all civilians except one be thankful that their cutcheries are not as other cutcheries—as the cutchery at Ennaculam for instance. In this interesting building the old records cannot be examined by reason of the venomous snakes which have taken up their abode amongst them. The Madras Government has budgeted for an able-bodied mungoose.—Pioneer.

The Office of Adjutant-General.—We hear that it is in contemplation to abolish the appointments of the Adjutant-generals of the Bombay and Madras Armies, and that only Deputy Adjutant-generals will be appointed to each of the presidencies, under the orders of the Adjutant-general of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief of India.—Poona Observer, March 16.

The Mints.—The Madras Government has made a suggestion (we learn from the Indian Daily News) which has been approved of and sanctioned by the Supreme Government. It involves the abolition of the Bullion Depot at Madras, and the transfer of the works of that office to the Bombay Mint. On the abolition of the Madras Mint, the Bullion Depot was retained at that presidency, for the convenience of the public. It appears now that few persons tender bullion in exchange for coin; and the local Government is said to be of opinion that there is no necessity for maintaining an establishment which would seem to be almost a sinecure, at a cost of upwards of Rs. 20,000 a year.

Medical.—We have great pleasure in announcing that Dr. John Ramsdaine has been appointed Sanitary Commissioner for the Presidency of Bombay vice Colonel Bell, R.E., resigned. It is an appointment that does great credit to the discernment of his Excellency the Governor.—Bombay Gazette.

The s.s. "Tilly" on Shore.—Telegrams have been received in Bombay by Mr. Chunder Ramjee, the owner of the s.s. Tilly, stating that that steamer, which left Calicut for Bombay on Thursday last week, got on shore at a place called Quilandy, and that she had been totally lost. We are glad to be able to say, however, that the passengers and crew are safe. The vessel, we may say, is insured. Mr. Chunder Ramjee was also the owner of the General Outram, which lately foundered in a cyclone.—Bombay Gazette, March 18.

Bombay, Baroda, and Central India Railway Terminus.—According to the Jam i-Jamshed it has been definitely arranged to fix the terminus of the Bombay, Baroda, and Central India Railway at Colaba.

Ahmednuggur Normal School.—We regret to mention that Mr. Haig, principal of the Ahmednuggur Normal School, has been obliged by illness to visit England for a season. Arrangements have been made for the carrying on of the work of the institution, and it is hoped that Mr. Haig may be able to return at the beginning of the next year.—Bombay Guardian.

Bombay Medical Mission.—We regret to mention that Dr. Young, of the Medical Mission, Bombay, has been obliged by ill health to leave India. His assistants and students will seek to go on with the work of the Mission, under the supervision of several medical gentlemen who have long taken an interest in the Mission. It is hoped that Dr. Young's stay at home will not be protracted.—Bombay Guardian, March 11.

Railways.—A committee, composed of Colonel Fife (Royal Engineers, Bombay), Colonel O'Connell, and Major Haig (R. E., Bengal), has been directed to meet without delay at some point of the Indus Valley Railway Extension between Roree and Kotree, to decide whether the line shall run on the right or left bank of the river. The committee are required also to provide, if possible, that the line selected be such that the railway works need be no impediment to the irrigation from the river of the adjacent lands.

Colonel Ballard.—The employes of the Mint have paid, and gracefully paid, a sincere compliment to Colonel Ballard, C.B. Resolved among themselves to present his portrait to Mrs. Ballard, they secretly brought a Chinaman to look at the Mint, and of course he looked at the Master. They also obtained a photograph and an uniform coat, and from these materials the intelligent foreign artist was expected to make a portrait, without a sitting. He has done so, and has done it remarkably well under the circumstances. Naturally enough Colonel Ballard was pleased with the gift of the Mint servants, and at the grace with which it was presented, and it will certainly be cherished as a spontaneous token of their esteem and goodwill.—Bombay Gazette.

The G.I.P. Railway.—The temporary road across the river Kistna, at the G.I.P. Railway bridge site, is now completed, and that a locomotive engine can at last pass into the Raichore Doab. There remains now about a month's work to complete the laying of the rails up to the point of junction with the Madras Railway at Raichore station. The recent heavy floods in the river Kistna, which caused a rise of twenty-two feet above dry season low water, completely swept away the first road which was made across the bed of this great river, and thereby delayed the completion of the line by at least a month. The rails of the Madras line are already laid into Raichore and the works have been recently inspected by the railway officials.—Bombay Gazette.

Military.—Major-General Grant, C.B., Commanding the Poona division of the army, accompanied by Capt. Farquharson and the Assistant-Adjutant and Quartermaster-General, left Poona for Sattara on Wednesday last on a tour of inspection. General Grant will proceed from Sattara to Mahableshwur, where the head-quarters of the division will be established from to-day until further orders. Col. Whitehill has assumed command of the Poona Brigade during the absence of Major-General Grant, C.B. Capt. Farquharson will, a month hence, proceed home on six months' leave.—Deccan Herald, March 15. The F Battery 18th Brigade Royal Artillery arrived from Neemuch at Kirkee on Tuesday, March 14.—Col. W. Ashburner, Commandant 1st Regiment Light Cavalry, who was on leave, arrived at Poona on Tuesday, March 14, and has assumed command of the regiment.

Dr. Bhau Daji's Last Tour.—To the Editor of the Times of India.—Sir,—I had lately an opportunity of examining minutely the old temple of Amba-bai and other temples and inscriptions at Kolapur and the caves in the neighbourhood of Karadha. A new Buddhist cave, or rather caves, has been discovered in Durgacha Dongar, on the other side of the hill in which the Karli Cave is situated. The approach is dangerous, owing to the path being cut on the side of a precipice. It contained an old inscription, of which only two letters now remain. In my January trip to the Nana Ghaut and Junir I discovered another set of caves, about seven miles to the right of the Nana Ghaut. They are Brahmanical, and comparatively modern. They are called the Volu-Sonala Caves. The Greek inscriptions which you stated as having been discovered by me are inscriptions in the old Cave character, but mentioning the fact that some of the Junir caves were constructed and ornamented by Yavanas or Greeks. Yavanas also make religious assignations in connection with some of the caves, in the fort of Sivaneri and the other hills surrounding Junir, of water cisterns, of land, and of money, and I find the names of about forty persons not made out before to be Greek names. There were other Greek names in one of the inscriptions, which is now nearly destroyed. I have found also two names, which are either Egyptian or Greek, in the cave at Karli.—I remain, &c., Bhau Daji.—Bombay, March 13, 1871.

Murder by a European Soldier.—A correspondent from Asseerghur writes thus on March 13:—A most cold-blooded murder has just been committed near this place. It appears two loafers came up to the Fort on Saturday. They shortly after left, accompanied by two soldiers of the 49th Regiment, to go to the Chandnee Station. It appears they parted company there, the two soldiers returning towards the Fort. After proceeding together for a couple of miles one of the soldiers (Robinson) said to his comrade, "I shall kill the first native I see." His comrade remonstrated with him, but, as it will be seen hereafter, to no purpose. They shortly after met a native, who said "salaam" and went on. Of him Robinson took no notice. Presently they met another man who did not make any salaam. Robinson said to his friend (Pinking), "Ask the man where he came from," and went on in an excited state, and then rushed at the native and tried to stab him, but the knife (a clasp one) closed in his hand; he then knocked the man down and cut his throat. Pinking says he was so alarmed that he ran away; but Robinson, after pulling the body off the road, ran after Pinking, and said, "If you say one word, I will do the same to you." Yesterday evening Pinking could not let the matter rest, so went to his commanding officer and told all. An escort went out last night, with police, accompanied by Pinking. With the aid of torches they found the body half-eaten, and the poor old man's head had been severed from the body. On Robinson's kit and knife blood was found. Both men are in custody, and the Assistant Superintendent of Police, who happened to be on the spot, has taken up the case. [A verdict of wilful murder against Robinson has been returned at the inquest.]—Bombay Gazette.

OFFICIAL REPORT ON THE COTTON CROP.—GUZERAT.—Mr. Stormont, superintendent of cotton experiments, Broach, reports up to March 9, "That the crop is now beyond the influence of the weather—that most of the ryots' houses are stored with kuppas, and that it is just possible a good deal of it will be kept until next season. The growers cannot quite understand why they should get only from Rs. 57 to Rs. 60 a bhar, when the same quantity last year at this time fetched from Rs. 110 to Rs. 120. Only such as are badly off are now parting with their crop; others, and by far the majority, are well supplied with jowar, rice, and other stores, and are therefore in a position to set the market at defiance for some time at least. Some of the villages visited would have, on an average, three bhars of kuppas in each house, so that an ordinary sized village of, say, one hundred and fifty houses would have an accumulation of four hundred and fifty bhars (bhar equal to 1,000 lbs.), or one hundred and thirty to one hundred and forty bales of clean cotton. It is entirely on account of this storing that the cotton is not being cleaned, and consequently not coming into market. Not more than one-third of the whole produce now remains in the fields." SINDE.—Mr. Strachan, superintendent of cotton experiments in Sinde, reports up to the 6th instant that a good deal of cotton is moving towards Kotree by land, and that from the samples he has seen it appears to be more than usually stained. He further states as follows:—"The price is still from Rs. 12 to Rs. 13 in the districts near Halla, at Giddo Bunder it is about a rupee more per maund, and at this place (Halla) the maund is one seer less than that in use in the districts; the former is about eighty pounds and the latter eighty-two pounds. Native dealers calculate on this difference of weight as one source of profit. People near the main canal branches are preparing to sow again. In the Sangra Canal, which a fortnight ago was dry, we have over three feet of water at present. With regard to the experimental farm, wheat looks well and is coming into ear, jamba fair, jira is coming on well now, though at first it did nothing. Tobacco we are planting out as fast as we can; the young plants were protected, and suffered nothing from the frost in January, and are now in fine condition for transplanting. I have sown no cotton yet, but about twenty-five acres of land are ready, and I will sow American seed during the current week as also some other kinds of exotics." SOUTHERN MAHRATTA DISTRICT.—Mr. Shearer, superintendent of cotton experiments, Dharwar, reports up to the 4th instant that "the present weather does not seem favourable to the New Orleans cotton, the plants presenting a blasted appearance. The rain of January is still showing bad effects. Indigenous cotton is said to have improved since the late rain, the plants continue to thrive and are flowering freely. The quantity of the expected produce will be light compared with ordinary seasons." J. H. MERRITT, for Cotton Commissioner. Bombay, 14th March.

IMPORTS.—BOMBAY, March 17.—Although the business done this week has still been on the most moderate scale, and prices generally have shown no improvement, yet a much steadier feeling has crept upon the market, and the dealers have been executing orders on a small scale on account of the interior. While, however, in some descriptions of Grey Goods, such as the 6 lbs. and 8 lbs. 45-inch, and 6 lbs. 40-inch Shirtings, and in Bleached Jaconets, there has been a decline, we have, on the other hand, to notice a considerable business in Turkey Red Goods at advanced rates. Grey Goods have continued dull throughout the week, with a decline of ⅛ to 1 anna per piece. Shirtings are more in demand; 3,000 pieces 30-inch 5¾ lbs. were sold at Rs. 3-5. Of Jaconets the undermentioned sales have been effected, viz.:—About 2,000 pieces 40-inch 2¾ lbs., at Rs. 1-12; about 3,700 pieces 2¼ lbs., at Rs. 1-15 to 1-15½; and about 1,000 pieces 45-inch 2½ lbs., at Rs. 2-5. In Mulls about 5,000 pieces 18 Mauchester realised Rs. 1-3 to 1-4; 200 pieces 40-inch 20 yards (Green ends) were taken at Rs. 2-8, and 300 pieces 50-inch 10 lbs. brought Rs. 2-10. Of Dhoties about 1,500 pairs changed hands at Rs. 1-10. Bleached Goods have also been dull, and stocks are heavy. Dyed and Printed Goods: Market dull; stocks heavy. Turkey Red Goods: More activity has prevailed, owing to the bazaar dealers buying at prices asked by first holders, and a further advance of 1 anna has taken place. The following are the sales which have transpired, viz.:—About 7,000 pieces 7-8th Cambrics, at Rs. 4-2 to 4-9½; about 900 pieces 9-8th Cambrics, at Rs. 5-11; a similar quantity of Jaconets, at Rs. 4-0½ to 4-1; about 200 pieces Mulls, at Rs. 3-7; and about 2,000 pieces 45-inch Sarries, at Rs. 2-0½. Grey Yarns have continued dull, with a decline of ⅛ to ¼ anna per lb. Metals: The better feeling which existed in the previous week continues; and in Copper an advance to 8 annas to 1 rupee per cwt. has taken place. We have to report the following sales for the week, viz.:—About 800 cwts. Copper Braziers, at Rs. 44-8 to 45; about 75 candies Iron (Swedish Bar), at Rs. 35; and about 300 cwts. Corrugated Iron, at Rs. 9-6.

EXPORTS.—BOMBAY, March 17.—Cotton: By the telegrams received during the week the Liverpool Market continued dull and heavy, with the quotation of Fair Dhollerah at 5¼d. down to the 13th inst., after which the market assumed a firmer tone, and the quotation on the 15th, our latest telegram, rose to 5 15-16d. Slight as the improvement latterly appears to have been, it has enabled the dealers to force up prices here Rs. 7 to 10 per candy, and a smaller business has in consequence been done. The total purchases made in Bombay for export amount in the week to about 5,500 candies, among which there were—of New Cotton, 1,000 candies of Comrawuttee, at Rs. 158 to 171; 1,000 candies of Akote, at Rs. 173 to 180; 750 candies of Barsee, at Rs. 169 to 170; 400 candies of Machine-ginned Broach, at Rs. 184 to 185; 400 candies of Dhollera, deliverable in sixty days, at Rs. 170 to 171; and 300 candies of Hingunghat, at Rs. 184 to 186; and of Old Cotton, 400 candies of Dhollera and Bhownuggur, at Rs. 138 to 160, according to quality; and 50 candies of Hingunghat, at Rs. 170. The market closes firm.

Official Papers.

THE PROTECTION OF THE FRONTIER.

From C. U. Aitchison, Esq., Secretary to the Government of India, Foreign Department, to the Secretary to the Landowners' and Commercial Association of British India.

I have received and laid before the Viceroy and Governor General in Council the memorial, dated the 5th instant, received through you from the Landholders' and Commercial Association, on the subject of the recent raids in Cachar.

2. The occurrence of these raids, resulting in a deplorable loss of life and some destruction of property, has caused H.E. in Council the deepest regret.

3. For the last two years, the difficult question of the defence of the Eastern Frontier from Cachar to Arracan has been a subject of special and anxious consideration on the part of the Government of India in communication with H.E. the Commander-in-Chief, the Government of Bengal, and the Chief Commissioner of British Burmah. The tribes occupying the country between our settled districts and Burmah are split into many minute sections owning no common authority. The country they inhabit is in some places absolutely unexplored, and for the most part very imperfectly known. Those parts of it that have been visited by Europeans have been found to consist of hills of varying altitude, covered with almost impervious jungle traversed only by paths used principally by wild elephants, and as the war tracks of the tribes. The expeditions which have on several occasions been sent to punish the tribes for marauding our territories have not added much to the available information either regarding the country or its people. It has been the object of H.E. in Council, in communication with the Government of Bengal, by the deputation from time to time of intelligent officers both from the side of Cachar and of Chittagong, to acquire full information regarding the country and its inhabitants, the wants of the tribes, and the causes and objects of their raids. As yet his efforts have only been attended with partial success; and for all practical purposes the country can only be described as a dense and unexplored jungle, deadly to European life for a great part of the year.

4. The defence of districts bordering for several hundreds of miles on a country of this kind is an undertaking of no ordinary difficulty. Neither can a state of insecurity which has existed for ages be remedied in a day. Those who settle there must not be unprepared to face to some extent the dangers usually incident to pioneers in all parts of the world. H.E. in Council is convinced that it is mainly by the co-operation of those gentlemen who hold lands and have commercial interests in the disturbed districts that any measure taken by Government can succeed. H.E. in Council is disposed to believe that in some cases tea gardens have been pushed further into the jungles than was prudent, and have been established in exposed situations beyond what would have formed the most eligible line of defence. But be that as it may, H.E. in Council is of opinion that the defence of an extensive and scarcely defined frontier extending into unexplored territories is a responsibility which the Government cannot accept, and that the first step towards the permanent defence of the border and the protection of our partially settled districts from attacks, such as those which have recently occurred in Cachar, is to define clearly the limit within which the Government is prepared to establish, maintain, and enforce its authority, and beyond which it will not at present undertake the responsibilities of administration and protection.

5. Such a line it has been the object of H.E. in Council to lay down. Its definition in no way affects the question of the Imperial Frontier Boundary, the accurate delineation of which has not yet been attempted. I am to send, for the information of the Association which you represent, the enclosed papers [omitted] being selections of the most important portions of the correspondence with the Bengal Government and the Chief Commissioner of British Burmah on this subject. This correspondence will speak for itself, and will show that, while there may be some difference of opinion on some minor points of policy, both the Government of Bengal and the Government of India have given their most earnest and prolonged attention to this question, and are fully prepared to carry out energetically such practical measures for the security of the border as may be considered suitable.

6. As already observed, the first essential step is to define the limits beyond which direct administration is not to be attempted. Such a line has been suggested in Arracan, and measures for its definition will be speedily undertaken. It will be continued through Chittagong in front of the present outposts. In Cachar a line has been generally indicated from the borders of Munnipoor to Hill Tipperah, including all the present tea gardens. It was one of the chief objects of Mr. Edgar's present visit to the Loshai country to determine the boundary line definitely. As soon as this is finally settled, it is the intention of H.E. in Council to open up such cleared tracks as may be necessary for defence. At suitable intervals posts will be established and held by a sufficient force. The boundary between the posts will be constantly patrolled. An additional expenditure of Rs. 37,000 a-year has been sanctioned for the frontier guard of Chittagong, and H.E. in Council is only waiting the views of H.E. the Commander-in-Chief, after his visit to Assam, before finally deciding on similar measures for Cachar. By this means H.E. in Council is not without hope that the recurrence of raids will be prevented; or, if they take place, that the force in charge of the out-posts will be enabled to inflict on the offenders summary and severe chastisement.

7. H.E. in Council looks to permanent results more from a policy of watchful and vigorous defence than from retaliatory expeditions. . . . .

[Part of the paragraph 7 and paragraph 8 are omitted.]

H.E. considers it essential that the district officers on the frontier should endeavour by all legitimate means to win the confidence of the tribes living beyond our line of defence, and establish a salutary personal influence over them. For this purpose, H.E. in Council has directed that all district officers on the frontier shall encourage frequent and friendly intercourse with the chiefs and tribes, visit them occasionally, induce them to enter our service and resort to our markets, and endeavour in a friendly way to settle any differences or disputes with our subjects, and adopt all means calculated to establish a permanent personal influence amongst them. So far as this policy has yet been tried, Government has no reason to doubt its ultimate success.

9. The measures, then, which H.E. in Council has commenced to carry out for the defence of the frontier are briefly these: to determine clearly the line up to which Government will enforce its direct authority: to establish friendly relations and influence among the tribes beyond; so to strengthen the defences by the establishment of military or police posts and by patrolling the boundary, that the tribes shall be deterred from attempting outrages within the restricted limits, but if violence is attempted, that severe and summary punishment shall be secured. It would be unreasonable, however, to expect on such a frontier the same security and protection as in places where law and order have been long established. It behoves those, therefore, who settle in exposed parts to be ever ready to defend themselves, and to co-operate with the authorities in warding off sudden and unforeseen attacks, which, as in the recent instance, neither the local officers nor the residents may anticipate, nor the guards be able entirely to prevent. H.E. in Council acknowledges with pride and satisfaction the gallant behaviour of the tea-planters and managers of the gardens which were attacked, and deeply regrets that, notwithstanding the determined resistance made by them and by the police in defence of the stockaders, the marauders should have succeeded in doing any damage. There are nearly two thousand men of the police and regular troops assembled in the districts of Cachar. The Governor General in Council has no doubt that the measures adopted will have the effect of restoring confidence to all British subjects, both European and Native. H.E. in Council is deeply interested in the success of British enterprise in the districts of Sylhet and Cachar, and the memorialists may be assured that the Government will do all that is possible or reasonable to encourage its development and ensure its safety.

Miscellaneous.—The ship Clifford, from Calcutta bound to Dundee, arrived at Spithead on Friday evening about sunset, and has been towed into harbour with only her foremast standing and with her bows stove in. She was in collision about four o'clock Friday morning with the ship British Lion, of Nova Scotia, from Antwerp, bound to New York. Nothing is known of the present condition of the British Lion.

Indian Artillery and Engineers.—The following letter has been addressed to the editor of the Times:—"Sir,—I trust you will take some notice of Mr. Cardwell's reply to Sir C. Wingfield where he says that he has not included the Indian Artillery and Engineers in clause 4 of the Army Regulation Bill, because they are dying out. Because the Indian Artilleries are dying out, therefore the interests of the individuals composing the dying-out corps are not to be considered. I am desirous of retiring. I paid largely to my retiring fund, and had the Madras Artillery not been put into a dying-out state by an act of Government I was certain of receiving £3 000 from my brother officers on my retirement. Does Mr. Cardwell think that the loss of £3,000, the interest of which would have given me nearly half the amount of my pension, is a trifling loss to me?—Yours faithfully, J. R. Magrath, Lieutenant-Colonel Madras Artillery.—Dover Castle, April 1."

THE AGRA BANK.

The ordinary general meeting of the Agra Bank, including the members of the late Agra and Masterman's Bank (Limited), was held on Tuesday.

Mr. Thomson, the chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, congratulated the shareholders that the balance-sheet showed business to the extent of five millions sterling, which was a substantial increase of one million and a half over the previous half-year. If every shareholder would keep a current account at the bank of not more than £100 he would receive 1 per cent., and the effect would be to increase the annual dividend to half per cent. Unquestionably the weak point of banks like this, doing business in different parts of the globe, with various establishments to that extent independent of each other, was the difficulty of securing efficient local management. This difficulty had been much lessened by the extension of the telegraphic area. The losses described in the report had not been made in London, where the total losses during the four years since the resuscitation had not exceeded £400. It was the Bank of Bombay that had chiefly disappointed them; Bombay, which in former days possessed the highest commercial character, had now become almost par excellence the most speculative, not to say discreditable, trading port in the whole world. This was chiefly owing to the cotton transactions carried on by means of the native brokers. In 1869 there were 895 failures in Bombay, as against 94 in Calcutta. Last year the value of the Bombay imports was 14 millions; this year they would be but 8 millions—a most important safeguard to merchants and bankers. The reason why the bank had not made more profits was that it had been working too cheap with regard to the buying and selling of bills. He was bound to admit that the dividend of four per cent. which the report recommended was not satisfactory. From the business the bank possessed, the connections it enjoyed, and the credit which they had obtained by adherence to sound principles, the profits ought to be such as to enable the board to declare a dividend of twice the amount. He congratulated the shareholders upon having got out of Chancery, and from the grasping hands of the liquidators. On the whole, however, and considering the peculiar circumstances in which they were placed, the prospects of the bank were of a hopeful character.

Mr. Palmer, a director, seconded the motion for the adoption of the report.

Mr. Webber, believing that Bombay was nothing better than a den of thieves, urged the bank to abolish its branch in that port.

In reply to questions from Mr. Jenkins, General Straubenzee, and Colonel Bassett,

The Chairman said there was no doubt the Bombay agency had been worked in the most unsatisfactory manner, but it was a most important branch, not only for its own sake, but as the medium of carrying out operations in other places. The board had reason to be dissatisfied with the judgment of the Bombay manager, who, although he was the oldest servant of the bank, was under notice of dismissal.

The report and accounts were unanimously received and adopted.

It was resolved that a dividend at the rate of 4 per cent. be declared. This will absorb £19,715, and leave a balance of £75 to be carried forward.

NATIONAL BANK OF INDIA.

The half-yearly meeting of proprietors was held on Tuesday, at the Bank Offices, 80, King William-street, City; Mr. W. Fitzwilliam in the chair.

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, expressed the deep regret of himself and colleagues that it was of so unsatisfactory a character. But, in addition to the circumstances mentioned in the report in reference to the exchange operations, there had been the unsettled state of commercial affairs on the Continent. These difficulties had been further aggravated by the transactions of Mr. Sherwood, the late manager of the branch at Hong Kong, which had materially affected the operations of the bank. This gentleman, who had been selected by the Board upon high recommendation, as eminently qualified, both by character and experience, for the management of that branch, had unfortunately displayed the most reckless disregard of his instructions and of the ordinary rules of banking—a course of conduct which had caused his immediate removal. By his indiscretion a sum of about £60,000 had been placed in jeopardy, but the directors hoped that by the favourable realisation of securities a part of that amount might be recovered. Under all these disadvantageous circumstances the directors were not only precluded from declaring a dividend, but had been compelled to transfer the sum of £22,000 from the reserve fund to provide for ascertained losses, and to wipe off the balance at debit of profit and loss account.

Mr. M'Iver spoke strongly in condemnation of the whole management of the bank.

The Chairman having given explanations of various items in the balance-sheet, the report was ultimately adopted.

THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN FINANCE.

The Parliamentary Committee on Indian Finance commenced taking evidence on the 24th March. The first witness was Sir Bartle Frere, who gave very full and detailed information touching the land settlements, revenue, and tenures of Western India. Out of a land revenue of twenty-one millions for India, Bombay's share was about three and a-half millions. The nature of the holdings and mode of the assessment varied greatly throughout that side of India, being often modified by historical or physical conditions. The Concan, for example, shows not a few traces of the old Portuguese tenure, while the tenures in the South Mahratta were similarly modified by its former subjection to Tippoo. In Guzerat, with a population as varied as the surface of the provinces itself, the assessment in one village may be taken field by field, each having its separate owner, while the next village prefers paying its rent collectively through the headman. In another district the settlement would have to be made with some great landlord, the descendant of some former prince. The English had found no difficulty in settling the land revenues of Guzerat and the Mahratta provinces, where the old native collectors had usually kept good accounts with their Governments. But in the Deccan there was much confusion at first, for the lands had been rackrented and the previous settlements much disturbed by our immediate predecessors. A revised settlement is now in progress there, great care being taken to secure accurate data for assessments intended to run thirty years. It was often found that reduced assessments brought in a great increase of actual revenue. On renewing a settlement, the rate of assessment is raised in proportion to any previous increase in the price of grain. Prices have risen lately, more or less, all over India; in some parts of Bombay, indeed, as high as the famine prices of Bengal or Orissa. The great rise in wages was mainly owing to the growth of the railway system. In readjusting assessments, the Government tried to share the benefits of increased prices as fairly as possible with the peasantry, and these latter were generally satisfied with the result. The hill tribes are assessed at so much per plough. A special charge of one anna per rupee has gradually been introduced for the making of roads and the maintenance of schools. In all new settlements this item forms part of the contract between Government and the landholders. An "Inam" commission began, about 1840, inquiring into the rent-free tenures which had come to include about a fourth of the land capable of cultivation. Their work was completed about seven years ago; but Sir George Clerk allayed the popular feeling by a compromise with the holders of Inam lands. After the thirty-years' leases expired, Sir Bartle would look for considerable increase of revenue; but meanwhile he expected great things from irrigation works and improved means of communication.

In reply to questions asked by various members of the Committee Sir B. Frere could give no particular reason for a thirty years' settlement, except that it generally pleased the people. As a fiscal question the assessment could hardly be pitched too low, short of making the people careless. The work of settlement is always going on in one district or another, according as the old leases fall in. The village system of the Deccan was found unsuited to the greater part of Bombay. There is no difficulty now in collecting the land revenue, nor any need to interfere between owners and cultivators. Nothing but a rise in prices will increase the land revenue, but new sources of revenue are opened up by increased prices. Government ought to keep its increased outlay below the level of its increased revenues. The thirty years' settlement is in fact a perpetual tenure, reassessable every thirty years. No system which did not harmonise with popular usage should ever be adopted. The improvement among the ryots began with the spread of railways, and was helped on by the demand for cotton during the American war. Many of them paid off their debts, bought land and farming-stock, and invested largely in gold and silver ornaments for themselves and their families—a process tantamount to putting money in a savings' bank.

At the next sitting of the Committee, on March 28, Sir B. Frere's examination was continued. He described the old system of yearly assessments, when the rent was paid by instalments, and the crops and persons of defaulters were frequently seized. The power of imprisonment lay with the district officer, but the village headman performed police duties. In Bombay there is a revenue secretary and two revenue commissioners. The collectors' districts vary in size from an area equal to all Scotland to that of a small English county. A thirty years' settlement necessarily involved the cost of employing more persons than a permanent settlement. The officers employed in collecting revenue had many other duties to perform, and there was not much room for economy with regard to village officers. Nobody ever questioned the duty of paying Government its accustomed charge on the land. In the native States a great deal of the land rent is still paid in kind, as some of it used formerly to be paid in Bombay. In the last fifteen years the land revenues had increased from eighteen to twenty-one millions, while the whole revenue had risen from thirty-three and one-third millions to fifty and a-half millions. It was usual to fix the assessment with some reference to the natural supply of water for irrigation. Wet land paid more than any other kind of land, especially in the native States, where, however, large reductions were made for the poorer crops. The provision of £1,752,705 on account of "treaties and engagements" referred to allowances, some of which were permanent, others for one or two lives only. This item would in time be largely diminished. In the settlement of Sindh, also, it was found wise to leave many of the feudal jagheers untaxed, and as these fall in the revenue will gain from their resumption. There are large tracts of unoccupied land, the bringing of which under tillage would depend on the facilities for irrigating it. The nomadic class are reached by a tax on clarified butter.

Mr. Ross Mangles, of the Indian Council, next came forward, and gave some pertinent evidence on the subject of the permanent settlement in Bengal and the North-Western Provinces. In spite of Mr. Shore's earnest pleading for delay, Lord Cornwallis, in 1793, established the permanent settlement in Bengal, as a means of founding there a landed aristocracy. Many of the persons thus settled with were not really landowners, but the settlement was made in gross, with the greatest recklessness, with no regard to the interests of the ryots, nor any reservation of the right of the Government to impose any new tax. It was unfair both to State and people; it was made when the value of the land was at its lowest through famine; and it involved the subsequent imposition of other taxes on the body of the people. Sir C. Wood had ordered the extension of this hurtful settlement to the rest of India; but, luckily, the order has not been carried out. Mr. Mangles knew of one zemindar who paid only Rs. 100 to the State, but asked thirty-three times as much for leasing his land to others. The Government also got very high prices for any estates which fell into its hands. By means of resuming lapsed and rent-free tenures, the State had recovered about half a million a year of revenue. So recklessly had the settlement been carried out, that the talookdars made what returns they pleased, and the rights of under-tenants were utterly disregarded. He reckoned the loss to the Government at six millions a year. Some of his colleagues who once differed from him have since come round, he thinks, to his own views. The ryots of Bengal were not better off, but were certainly more oppressed, than those elsewhere. Of late, however, their condition had begun to improve, under the law that confirms a twelve years' tenancy. The railways also have benefited the country. With regard to the income-tax, Mr. Mangles owned that, outside the official classes, its produce was lamentably small. The zemindars of Bengal do nothing in return for their fiscal privileges.

On March 31 Sir R. Montogomery and Mr. R. A. Dalyell were examined. The summary of their evidence must be deferred till next week. The Committee then adjourned to April 18.

Miscellaneous.

CHARTERED MERCANTILE BANK OF INDIA.—The directors of the Chartered Mercantile Bank of India, London, and China have declared a dividend of 2 per cent., free of income tax, for the half-year ended December.

TELEGRAPH RECEIPTS.—The traffic receipts of the Falmouth, Gibraltar, and Malta Telegraph Company (Limited), for the month of March amounted to £9,275. 17s. 5d. The following are the receipts of the British-Indian Submarine Telegraph Company (Limited) for the past three months: January, £5,461. 17s. 3d.; February, £7 419. 9s. 3d.; March, £11,901. 4s. 3d. During the month of January and the first eleven days in February the Falmouth Cable was interrupted. The traffic receipts of the Marseilles, Algiers, and Malta Telegraph Company (Limited) for January amounted to £939. 1s. 6d., and for February, £1,070. 18s. 11d. The disturbed state of France still continues to affect this company's revenue.

EXPORTS OF BULLION.—We observe by G. de Quetteville's Indian Circular of April 5 that there is a resumption of Bullion exports from Southampton to Calcutta, Penang, and Singapore, by the P. and O. Company's vessels. For some months past the exports to India have been on an extremely limited scale. Exports per Nubia, March 18. from Southampton to Batavia, gold, £4,200; to Singapore, silver, £53.770. Per Massilia, April 1. from Southampton to Calcutta, gold, £10,000; to Penang, silver, £22,000. By the steamers of the Messageries Imperiales the exports have been as follows:—To Madras, per Peiho, Feb. 19, gold, £2,800; per Prevence, March 19, silver, £1,000. To Singapore, per Peiho, Feb. 19, gold, £2,880; per Prevence, March 19, gold, £2,800.

BURMESE ENVOYS.—Maha Menhla Kyoden Paden Yvoon, with his three companions, from the Court of Mandalay, accompanied by Captain Sprye, had the honour of waiting on Tuesday on the Prime Minister, to present a "Royal letter and decoration of honour" from his Majesty the King of Burmah. Mr. Gladstone received the deputation very kindly. Later in the day the envoys paid a visit to the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress.—Four of the envoys of the King of Burmah, accompanied by Captain Sprye, paid a visit to the Mansion House, and on the invitation of the Lord Mayor took seats on the Bench. They observed the proceedings with evident interest; but there was, as it happened, only one case before the Court, and that of no importance. The appearance on the Bench of the envoys in their picturesque and handsome costume excited much interest. They are quite conversant with English and some of the Continental languages. On leaving, the Lord Mayor invited them to the Easter banquet.

BILLS ON INDIA.—Tenders for £400,000 in bills on India were received on Wednesday, the 5th inst., at the Bank of England. The amounts allotted were—to Calcutta, £287,560, to Bombay, £100,000 and Madras, £12,500. The minimum price was fixed as before, at 1s. 10½d. on all the Presidencies. Tenders on Calcutta and Madras at 1s. 10⅝d. will receive about 25 per cent., and on Bombay at 1s. 10½d. about 91 per cent. Those above, in full. These results exhibit less demand for the means of remittance to the East.

TELEGRAPHIC FEAT.—On Saturday experiments were made on the Indo-European telegraphic line, via Teheran, to work direct from England to India. Communication was first established between London and Kurrachee, and messages were exchanged successfully. The line was then attached to that running between Kurrachee and Bombay, which latter place made signals to London. A commercial message was now forwarded from England to Bombay, and instantaneously acknowledged. This was without re-transmission, although the distance by the line is upwards of 6,000 miles.

MILITARY.—A new code of regulations for married soldiers was issued from the War Office on Saturday. The "married roll" is, in future, to include all staff sergeants, military foremen, six sergeants out of every ten, and seven per cent. of rank and file, provided they have completed seven years' service in the army and carned one good-conduct badge. No soldier is to be placed on the married roll unless he obtains the consent of his commanding officer before marriage. The wives and families of soldiers married with leave are granted certain allowances, in the shape of lodging money, provisions, fuel, and light; and if any woman on the roll misconducts herself, the commanding officer of the corps may remove her name and the names of her children, and send them to her home. When on foreign stations, and in certain other cases, half a soldier's ration of food will be supplied to each of the women, or 3d. a day, and a quarter ration, or 1½d. to each child. When a soldier is necessarily separated from his family, these allowances will be doubled.

ALBERT ASSURANCE COMPANY.—The appeal of the Albert Assurance Company's re-organisers to the House of Lords has met with such success that the Lords' Committee have passed the Bill, appointing an arbitrator in the person of Lord Cairns. Some of the facts disclosed in connection with the winding up fully bear out what we have repeatedly observed in these columns as to the state of the law regarding the liquidation of joint-stock companies. The liquidator of the Albert stated that he did not remember a case of an insurance company in liquidation being finally wound up. There were fifty-eight of such companies in Chancery, some of them for fifteen years and upwards! The liquidators of the Albert had paid up to October last £21,000, of which £6.000 represented a solicitor's bill, made up to the previous June! Surely the time will come when our legislators will open their eyes to such a monstrous condition of things. Here we have provident Chancellors of the Exchequer, parsimonious Lords of the Admiralty, and saving War Ministers, but the law is allowed to revel in all the license of spoliation, fattening lawyers and starving suitors. It is really appalling to contemplate the amount of ruin and misery in the last few years, in connection with public companies, which have been brought about simply and solely by the law of the land. The law offers, literally, a premium for the destruction of a company by enabling fortunes to be amassed in the liquidation. The inducement held out to the officials, liquidators, and solicitors, to prolong the winding up is so palpable as to be at once corrupt and immoral. We blame not the lawyers, but the law.—Asiatic.

NEWS FROM EGYPT.—The correspondent at Alexandria of the Pall Mall Gazette writes on the 17th ult.:—Jirjis, Prince Kasa's Envoy, is still at Cairo, quite at a loss what course to pursue, owing to the refusal of the Foreign-office to receive him. He is a superior man, and speaks English perfectly, having been educated at Bombay. He dresses as a European, and is so fair of skin that no one would take him for an Abyssinian. His colleague, Mertcha Werka [not the Senior Envoy Jirjis, as we understood from a former lettter of the same correspondent] is still at Massowah, and will probably not return to Egypt. I fear that some unfortunate Englishman will hereafter pay the penalty of our ungenerous treatment of Casa's envoys. Abyssinia, it appears, is in a state of disorganisation from end to end. The Wakshum Gobazie has gone against Magdala to leave insurrection behind him, and so of the other chiefs: as they move the people transfer their allegiance to some one else. Kasa seems the most prudent and wary, and has the territory he holds in good hand. The guns and arms left him by Lord Napier have been his salvation; without them the Wakshum would have driven him from Tigre long ago. M. de Lesseps is at Isma'iliyyah, in great trouble, I am told, about his share and obligation holders. It is now alleged that the curage of the canal last year cost nearer £450,000 than £144,000, the sum stated in the Journal de Port Said. Should that be the case, instead of a net profit of £58,812, there will be a deficit of income over expenditure of no less than £247,188. There is a report here that English engineers and others are actively engaged at Cairo in collecting information respecting the actual condition of the canal, its capabilities, finances, and future prospects, with a view, it is said, of some effort being made to place the undertaking upon a better footing.

Return of the New Indian Regiments.—The following letter appeared in the Broad Arrow of Saturday last:—"Sir,—According to present arrangement of the Indian reliefs, the new line regiments are to be sent home at the rate of one each year. The 107th, therefore, will go in 1874-5, the 108th 1875-6, and 109th in 1876-7. As all the new regiments date their present organisation and became Queen's troops from 1862, they were fairly entitled to suppose that, from that date they would be brought on the regular roster for home service. When the regiments were first raised, a large number of officers volunteered for them solely with a view of obtaining the advantage of serving at home. To obtain this advantage most of them gave up good prospects, both of high position and still higher pay, which they would have gained by joining the Indian Staff Corps. It is, therefore, felt to be a great hardship, I believe I may safely assert throughout the 107th, 108th, and 109th Regiments, that the ordinary system of reliefs should not be adopted in their case. Present arrangements will send home before them all purchase regiments that came to India in 1863; and in the case of the unfortunate 109th, regiments that left England in 1866 (being four years their junior in Indian service), will go home a year before them! I believe the military authorities at home are not aware how anxious the officers of the new line regiments are to serve at home, both for their own benefit and for that of their regiments. All the older officers served in India for many a long year before they joined the Queen's army, and in their case it is cruelly hard that the one advantage they anticipated, and for which they surrendered large pecuniary advantages, should now be withheld.—Your obedient servant, Bottlehead. —India, Feb. 28, 1871."

Arrival of H.M.'s Troopship "Crocodile."—(Portsmouth, April 7.)—Her Majesty's iron screw Indian troopship Crocodile, Captain George H. Parkin, arrived here this morning from Alexandria, and was taken alongside the watering island in the dockyard. She brings 45 sergeants, 12 trumpeters and drummers, 647 rank and file, 60 soldiers' wives, and 118 soldiers' children, who are invalids, together with 6 sergeants, 44 rank and file, 8 soldiers' wives, 18 soldiers' children (time expired), and 16 men to be discharged with bad character. These numbers include men belonging to various regiments and corps serving in India. The following is a list of the officers who took passage home in the Crocodile: Lieutenant G. M. Cruikshank, Bombay R.E.; Capts. J. S. Wheley and H. Farquharson and Lieut. T. B. Humfrey, of the 8th Regt. of Foot; Assistant Surgeon E. Hopkins, of the Staff Corps; Assistant Surgeon W. T. Daubeny and Captain A. H. Hartford, 36th Foot; Paymaster C. D. Manning, 38th Foot; Lieut.-Colonel T. S. Brown, 55th Foot; Lieut. A. O'Brien, 2nd Battalion 60th Foot; Captain J. Whitby, 96th Foot; Deputy-Inspector-General of Hospitals J. Summers and Lieutenant E. L. Stehelin, Staff Corps. The troops will disembark to-morrow (Saturday), when the invalids will be forwarded by special train to the Royal Victoria Hospital at Netley, and the time-expired men to the discharge depot at Chichester. The Crocodile left Alexandria on the 23rd ult., and experienced good weather during the whole voyage.

Imperial Parliament.

House of Commons, Monday, April 3.—Gauge of Indian Railways.—Mr. Grant Duff stated, in answer to Mr. Kinnaird, that the Indian Government had determined that the gauge of the railways which were now in construction from the Punjab to the frontier should be the reduced gauge of 3ft. 3 in.

The Nawab Nazim of Bengal.—Mr. Grant Duff stated, in reply to Mr. Haviland-Burke, that the Secretary of State for India had received a telegram on the 8th February, 1870, from the Indian Government in reference to a certain memorial of the Nawab Nazim of Bengal, and that the Secretary of State replied by telegram the same day to the effect that the memorial had been sent out to India.

Spirit of the Home Journals.

THE NAWAB OF BENGAL.

The Pall Mall Gazette observes that it is sometimes stated, and constantly insinuated by certain writers that the Nawab Nazim is a reigning Indian prince who has come here to complain that the treaties made with him have been broken, and that all the reigning Indian princes are interested in his gaining his case. The Nawab Nazim is as much a reigning Indian prince as The Mulligan is a reigning Irish prince. Of the two The Mulligan has the better claim to the royal dignity. He pretends to represent a line of Sovereigns who ruled over part of Ireland before the Saxon entered the country, but the Nawab merely alleges that he represents a set of modern lords-lieutenant who, so to speak, entrenched themselves in the Phœnix Park and defied their masters, who were foreigners like themselves. Lord Macaulay, indeed, goes farther than this, and says that the particular Viceroy from whom Mr. Burke's client is descended was a mere puppet set up by the English to squeeze lacs and crores of rupees to be taken home to England out of a miserable population. But while the fallen fortunes of The Mulligan only admit of his vaguely designating his home as lying somewhere "in the direction of Oxford-street," the Nawab Nazim enjoys a vast income and resides—so to speak, in Dublin Castle—in the palace of his predecessors at Moorshedabad. He is, in fact, a pensioner on a gigantic scale, and the sole question which he has started is whether the East India Company, in the infancy of its rule, did not make his predecessor certain promises which, if properly fulfilled, would make his enormous pension more enormous still. So far from the real native princes of India being interested in his success, they are interested in the very contrary. If he succeeds, the exact meaning and significance of the precedent will be that whenever any Indian Power has succeeded another, the existing Power is bound to satisfy with accuracy more than rigid all the promises made and expectations held out to the deposed dynasty at the time of deposition. Now there is not a single reigning Indian house which has not arisen on the ruins of half a dozen others, and there is not a single reigning dynasty in whose history there are not examples without number of unfulfilled pledges. We suppose that if the British Government wished to give the real native princes the strongest impression of its desiring to veil gross tyranny under hollow hypocrisy, it could not more certainly gain its end than by telling them that it expected them to pay faithfully and for an indefinite number of lives all the pensions which they have promised to the families of the chiefs whom they supplanted. The newspapers so curiously selected are further in the habit of saying or thinking that the Nawab Nazim represents the ancient natural Sovereigns of Bengal; that he is still an object of reverence and love to a vast population; and that, but for his influence in 1857, forty millions of warlike Bengalees, armed to the teeth, would have joined in an insurrection against the British power. The argument is addressed to persons who happen to be ignorant that the vast majority of these forty millions are Hindoos; that the Nawab Nazim is a Mahometan and the representative of a line of Mahometans; that of all tyrannies known to the world the tyranny of the Mahometans over the Hindoos was the most cruel; and that of all Mahometan oppressions in India those of the Imperial Viceroys at Moorshedabad were infinitely the greatest and grossest.

As the mails despatched on Friday evening will only reach Brindisi, under existing arrangements, a short time before the departure of the Packet, the Supplementary Mails hitherto despatched on Saturday morning will be discontinued.—By command of the Postmaster-General.—General Post-office, October 19, 1870.

Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S (Ex. Army Med. Staff)

CHLORODYNE

IS THE ORIGINAL AND ONLY GENUINE.

CAUTION.—Vice-Chancellor Sir W. P. Wood stated that Dr. COLLIS BROWNE was undoubtedly the Inventor of CHLORODYNE: that the story of the Defendant, Freeman, being the Inventor was deliberately untrue, which he regretted had been sworn to. Eminent Hospital Physicians of London stated that Dr. J. Collis Browne was the discoverer of Chlorodyne; that they prescribe it largely, and mean no other than Dr. Browne's.—See Times, July 12, 1864.

The Public, therefore, are cautioned against using any other than

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.

Remedial Uses and Action.

This INVALUABLE REMEDY produces quiet, refreshing sleep, relieves pain, calms the system, restores the deranged functions, and stimulates healthy action of the the secretions of the body, without creating any of those unpleasant results attending the use of opium. Old and young may take it at all hours and times when requisite. Thousands of persons testify to its marvellous good effects and wonderful cures, while medical men extol its virtues most extensively, using it in great quantities in the following diseases:—

Diseases in which it is found eminently useful—Cholera, Dysentery, Diarrhœa, Colics, Coughs, Asthma, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Whooping Cough, Cramp, Hysteria, &c.

Extracts from Medical Opinions.

The Right Hon. Earl Russell communicated to the College of Physicians and J. T. Davenport that he had received information to the effect that the only remedy of any service in Cholera was Chlorodyne.—See Lancet, Dec. 31, 1864.

From A. Montgomery, Esq., late Inspector of Hospitals, Bombay.—"Chlorodyne is a most valuable remedy in Neuralgia, Asthma, and Dysentery. To it I fairly owe my restoration to health, after eighteen months' severe suffering, and when other remedies had failed."

Dr. Lowe, Medical Missionary in India, reports (Dec. 1865) that in nearly every case of Cholera in which Dr. J. Collis Browne's Chlorodyne was administered the patient recovered.

Extract from Medical Times, Jan. 12, 1866.—"Chlorodyne is prescribed by scores of orthodox medical practitioners. Of course it would not thus be singularly popular did it not 'supply a want and fill a place.'"

Extract from the General Board of Health, London, as to its efficacy in Cholera.—"So strongly are we convinced of the immense value of this remedy, that we cannot too forcibly urge the necessity of adopting it in all cases."

Beware of spurious and dangerous compounds sold as CHLORODYNE, from which frequent fatal results have followed.

See leading article, Pharmaceutical Journal, Aug. 1, 1869, which states that Dr. J. Collis Browne was the Inventor of Chlorodyne; that it is always right to use his preparation when Chlorodyne is ordered.

CAUTION.—None genuine without the words "Dr. J. Collis Browne" on the Government stamp. Overwhelming medical testimony accompanies each bottle.

Summary and Review.

OUR latest advices by the Overland Mail are—from Bombay, March 25; Agra, March 23; Calcutta and Madras, March 22.

THE event of the week in Calcutta was a warm debate on the 17th over Sir R. Temple's new Income-tax Bill. After the Finance Minister had formally introduced his Bill, with the usual motion to refer it to a Select Committee, Mr. Robinson, the Madras member, was the first to begin pulling it to pieces. There was no need for an income-tax at all, he said, if the estimates had been properly made out. Too little had been allowed for Land Revenue, Excise, and Customs, for instance. He denounced the tendency to increased outlay, showed the extreme unfitness of an income-tax for India, and entreated the Government to do without an impost so widely hated and so entirely needless. Mr. Cowie, while equally averse from the tax, would let it stand for the present year if the rice duty might be abolished, and the tax were limited to incomes of Rs. 1,000 and upwards. Mr. Inglis would take no compromise, but stoutly opposed the income-tax in a long and powerful speech. It was a tax "odious to the people and odious to the officers who have to assess and collect it. . . . The people detest the tax because of the inquisition, oppression, and extortion, which everywhere and always accompany its enforcement; the officers of Government hate it, because they see all these evil practices going on around them while they are powerless to put a stop to them." He exposed Sir R. Temple's misleading statement that only thirteen cases of injustice had been reported from Bengal, and none from the other provinces; the fact being that the Bengal Government sent up thirteen cases as a sample of the many reported to them, and that if no cases were reported from the other provinces, it was not because the prevalence of bribery and extortion was for a moment doubted. Not a man, he averred, would be found who, "having assessed a district to the income-tax, will say that he believes it to have been levied fairly, and without a lamentable amount of bribery and corruption." For one who paid the tax, twenty paid to get off paying it, and for every rupee that went into the Treasury another went into the pocket of some native official. Such was his answer to Sir Richard's argument, that only one in three hundred paid the tax; and for these and like reasons Mr. Inglis proposed to restrict the minimum of taxation to incomes of Rs. 1,000 a-year, and the working of the tax to one year.

MR. COCKERELL denounced the continuance of the tax as a breach of faith, and argued that a proper estimate for opium and customs would have rendered it wholly needless. Mr. Chapman, on the other hand, accepted the reduced income-tax as a reasonable relief, was pleased on the whole with the new scheme of local finance, which was "not a bad bargain for the Government," but sharply criticised various items of civil and military expenditure, and remarked that India seemed to "have the privilege of paying whatever bill is sent in to her" from this country.

MR. BULLEN SMITH protested against the renewal of the income-tax for an unlimited term, and exposed the worthlessness of any conclusion drawn from the alleged scarcity of officially reported cases of oppression. Everyone, he said, in effect, knew that the official statement utterly misrepresented the real truth. He dwelt at some length on the retention of the rice-duty, and wondered whether the proposed loan of two and a-half millions was to be raised in England without the concurrence of the Indian Government. Mr. G. Campbell, the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, bore witness to the general unpopularity of the income-tax, deprecated a hurried discussion of the Bill, and suggested the passing of it for one year only; among other reasons, because he did not look on an income-tax as strictly an imperial tax. He was also for borrowing in India rather than in England.

COLONEL STRACHEY made a long defence of the Bill and the Budget, in which he was supported more or less thoroughly by General Norman, Messrs. Ellis, Stephen, and J. Strachey, and by Lord Napier of Magdala. A reply from Sir Richard, and the passing of the original motion by nine to six, wound up a spirited debate of seven hours.

IN the course of his speech Lord Napier protested against the abstraction of thirty guns from India as "a very serious loss of power," and promised to take his stand against any further attempts to reduce the Indian Army.

COMPARING the regular with the Budget Estimates for the receipts of the past year, we find that Sir R. Temple had overrated his receipts by more than half-a-million in all from Forests, Assessed Taxes, Salt, the Mint, Law and Justice, Education, Interest, and Railways. In three of these items the error exceeded £100,000 on each. The excess of receipts over his reckoning amounts on the other hand to more than two millions, half of which was due to the unexpected yield from opium. Of the remainder, nearly £300,000 is ascribed to Miscellaneous receipts, £166,775 to the Army, £144,516 to the Post-office, and £141,500 to Customs. For the balance, Sir Richard was mainly indebted to Land Revenue, Excise, Stamps, and Telegraphs. In the matter of expenditure, his estimates fell short of the mark by £1,716,907 in all, of which more than half-a-million was expended on the Army, £414,908 on Miscellaneous Items, £319,517 on Guaranteed Railway Interest, and £200,000 on Allotments for Provincial Services. The rest is divided between Retired Allowances, Opium, Post-office, Interest on Service Funds, and Political Agencies. On the other hand, the Expenditure was less than the Estimates by £2,896,752, on twenty-three items; nearly two millions being saved on Extraordinary Public Works alone. The next largest saving was £141,710, on Railways. On the Land Revenue £87,512 was saved, £82,519 on Salt, £74,330 on Education, £57,800 on Public Works Ordinary, £61,400 on Refunds, and £52,619 on Telegraphs. Thus between over and under-reckonings on both sides of the amount, Sir Richard was able to show a net surplus of nearly a million instead of the £163,400 estimated by him last April.

The Civil Service Memorial to the Duke of Argyll has been answered in a manner which will probably satisfy the most of those concerned. His Grace has consented to let every covenanted civilian retire at the end of his term on a thousand a-year, whatever amount he may have subscribed to the Annuity Fund. Invalid pensions, instead of increasing by £100 every five years, will be allowed to increase by £20 for each year. The Annuity Fund will be abolished, and all retrenchments from civilians' salaries will be credited to Government instead of being paid into a separate fund; the monthly deductions being continued at the old rate of four per cent. The new arrangements will take effect from June 24, 1870. It is calculated that before the end of the new financial year seventeen retirements from the Bengal Service will have taken place under the new rules.

Bombay appears to be suffering from a chronic scarcity of judges in her High Court. Some weeks ago we drew attention to this undesirable state of things. Other letters have since reached us complaining bitterly of the law's delay in that presidency, and of the hardship endured by many an expectant suitor owing to the ever-increasing arrears of judicial business. Justice long deferred naturally makes sick the hearts of those who have more or less to pay for the chance of ultimately getting justice done to them; and even the attendant lawyers who thrive on their neighbours' quarrels must sometimes wish that the work before them could be got through at a more profitable pace. In spite of beginning early and sitting on to a late hour in the evening, it appears that the present staff of judges are quite unequal to overtaking their arrears of business, while it is easy to imagine the trouble, disappointment, and expense which a suitor incurs who sees his cause unavoidably adjourned from one day to another for days together, without any fair prospect of an early settlement. If all accounts be true, one more judge at least is absolutely needed to do away with an evil which no civilised community can long afford to tolerate.

In a sensible article from which we have quoted elsewhere, in favour of local armies for India and the Colonies, the Broad Arrow makes one little mistake. It appears to be under the impression that a native Indian regiment never has more than two or three English officers. This was substantially true of the old irregular regiments before the Mutiny; but for all native regiments as now organised the average number of English officers in each must be doubled at the very least. Let not our contemporary however feel concerned for the bearing of this little error on the strength of his reasoning. Even with their six or seven officers apiece, the Sepoy regiments of to-day are less fit as a rule to "confront a well-organised foe," than were the Irregulars of other days with only half the present allowance of white leaders. For the native officers of these latter were picked men of good social standing and military aptitudes, who could at a pinch dispense with European leading, whereas the modern Jemadar or Subardar differs little if at all from his true prototype in the old regular regiments of Bengal—not Bombay; a worthy old soldier promoted from the ranks by seniority, at an age when he ought to have been peacefully smoking his hookah at the door of his village home in Oudh or Rohilkund. It is curious to reflect that a native regiment thus officered should be supposed to need no more than half-a-dozen Englishmen to command it, while seven times that number are not deemed too many for our best English battalions.

While the Covenanted Services of India are gaining some kind of redress for the grievances of which they are seldom backward in complaining, would it not be well to pay a little heed to the just claims of the Uncovenanted Services also? In the Educational Department for instance there is ample room for improvement with respect to the rules that regulate pay and promotion. In the Public Works department an officer may now begin upon £420 a-year, with the certainty of rising steadily and not too slowly up to at least £1,200 a-year. If he prove a little more talented or fortunate than his neighbours, he may reckon in time upon even £3,000 a-year. An Educational officer on the other hand has no such pleasing certainty before him, although the nature of his employment and the promises made to him of late years entitle him to at least equal consideration with Public-Works officers in any scheme of administrative reform. At present his chances of promotion and higher pay depend mainly on a variety of accidents. If the scene of his labours lies in Bengal, he may count on a gradual increase of pay, under the grading system there established, at the rate of about £120 a-year every fifth year. If however he happens to be serving in the Central Provinces, where no such system exists, he may have worked hard and well for sixteen or eighteen years without earning more than £500 a-year, unless he has somehow contrived to win the special countenance of his superiors. An Inspector in these provinces who does his duty must work harder and take longer journeys than his rival in Bengal or the North-West; and yet the latter may be drawing his £800 or £1,000 a-year, while the former will continue to keep up appearances on half that sum. To such an one the hardship of his lot seems all the greater, when he remembers that a college-professor in Bengal or Bombay begins upon no less than £500 a-year. There are no Professors in the Central Provinces because there are no Colleges; but the Inspector in India takes rank with the Professor, and ought certainly to enjoy a proportionate share of the financial loaves and fishes even in provinces where Professors are unknown. To find oneself after seventeen or eighteen years of good service struggling, perhaps with broken health and a growing family, to maintain the position of a gentleman and a scholar decently on £500 a-year, with small chance of early promotion, must be a dreary prospect indeed, to say nothing of the added bitterness of seeing younger and less competent men promoted for no sufficient reason over one's head. Would it not be as well to substitute the grading system of Bengal for a system so degrading as that which, on the evidence before us, may be said to exist in some parts of India? It is a cruel economy which tempts highly-educated gentlemen into a service that holds out nothing better than £500 a-year after a long career of important and unremitting labour.

Not a few of our readers will share the deep regret with which we notice the death, on the 1st current, of Mrs. Manning, whose "Ancient and Mediæval India" was reviewed in these columns about two years ago. But two or three days before her death she had been present at a meeting of one of those learned societies in whose affairs she was wont to take an intelligent interest. A cold, caught on her way home, proved swiftly fatal to one of the most learned yet least assuming women of the day. Daughter of the late Mr. Isaac Solly, Mrs. Manning came of an intellectual stock. As Mrs. Speir she brought out in 1856 her "Life in Ancient India," a remarkable witness to her well-digested learning and great literary power. This work, which reproduced in a truly popular form the pith of many volumes of old Sanskrit lore, and from which Mr. Griffith quotes largely in his "Scenes from the Ramayan," was almost entirely rewritten when, in 1869, it re-appeared as "Ancient and Mediæval India." The revised work bore striking evidence to the thoroughness of Mrs. Manning's knowledge and the diligence with which she gathered and turned to good account the latests fruits of Oriental scholarship. Ignorant herself of Sanskrit, she managed as if by instinct to extract the essence of all that was best in Sanskrit literature; and her book, as the Saturday Review declared of it, "will probably long and deservedly remain a standard handbook in the Literature, Arts, and Sciences of Ancient India." Brimful of learning on everything connected with the life and manners of Old India, it is yet so readable that the least learned might easily master its contents. Mrs. Manning outlived her second husband, Sergeant Manning. Her latest efforts for the good of India, in which some years of her life had been spent, were devoted to the movement for Social Reform which has just been started in London. Happily for those concerned, the work thus forwarded by her will be worthily carried on under her like-minded step-daughter, Miss Manning. In society the deceased lady made her influence felt rather by her womanly graces, by the charm of her large-hearted sympathies, and by the tact with which she drew out other people's best points, than by an open display of her own intellectual treasures. In short she was one of those thorough women whose example proves that intellectual culture and deep learning are of no sex.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

TUESDAY, April 18, 1871.

LOCAL CESSES ON LAND IN BENGAL.

The fact that seven out of fifteen members of the Indian Council have recorded their dissent from the India Office Despatch of last May on the subject of local cesses for Bengal, shows at any rate the need for walking warily in our fiscal dealings with the people of India. It should also serve to keep alive and strengthen among the latter a belief in the earnest desire of their English rulers to observe at whatever cost the pledges they may from time to time have given to this or that section of their Indian subjects. From the names moreover of the dissenting seven we can see how equally the weight of official opinion at home divides itself between the supporters and the opponents of the Indian Government in its recent controversy with the Government of Bengal. Not long ago indeed, according to one of the dissentients, a large majority of the Home Council forbade the policy which has now been sanctioned by a majority of one; and it is even assumed that the subsequent change of votes from one side to the other has not much to do with any real change of individual opinions.

Be that as it may however, it is certain that the policy of levying additional cesses on the land, for whatever purpose, in a province which eighty years ago was permanently settled at a fixed money rent, is still warmly opposed both here and in India by a large proportion of Anglo-Indian statesmen. These gentlemen cannot get over the conviction that such a policy is either in itself a downright breach of faith with the landholders of Bengal, or has at least the look of being such. They would drive their opponents between the two horns of an agreeable dilemma, between the unrighteous violation of a solemn pledge and the impolitic semblance of such violation. The effect in either case on the minds of the people of India would, it is inferred, be equally hurtful to our rule; for however upright the motives of our conduct might really be, no one in India, at least among the landed classes and their friends, would give us credit for anything less criminal than a positive breach of faith. The zemindars of Bengal, we are reminded by Sir Erskine Perry, "are unanimous in considering that public faith will be broken if local cesses are imposed by the Government." Sir H. Montgomery strongly deprecates any act which would lay the Government "open to be charged with a breach of faith." Mr. H. T. Prinsep protests with grief and disappointment against the right of arbitrary taxation claimed by the Indian Government, in the shape of direct taxes which "are in the nature of a forced contribution, and will be sure to be so regarded by the population." The levying of a local rate on land in Bengal, were it otherwise justifiable, would entail, he argues, a fresh survey of the entire province, at very great cost; and how could such a survey be carried on without seeming to the zemindars like the first step towards "a distinct addition to the rent or jumma settled with them for ever as the amount to be taken by Government for its purposes?"

With most of the dissentients however it is not the seeming, but the real breach of public faith involved in such a measure, which calls for the weightiest reprehension. No one on this point speaks more decidedly than Sir E. Perry himself, whose past judicial training adds weight to his remonstrances. He has "come reluctantly to the conclusion, after many struggles and attempts to draw fine distinctions in support of a different view, that the language and acts of Lord Cornwallis and of the members of the Government of his day were so distinct, solemn, and unambiguous that it would be a direct violation of British faith to impose special taxes in the manner proposed." At the very time when distinct promises of exemption from all other special demands were being made to the zemindars whose lands were permanently assessed, Mr. Law, brother to the first Lord Ellenborough, attempted to provide for a time when the State would need more money from the landed classes; but his proposal was "unhesitatingly rejected by Lord Cornwallis's Government as fatal to the object of the whole settlement." Even Lord Dalhousie in 1854 had to give up his scheme of a local tax in Bengal for the maintenance of an improved police, "after reading Sir Barnes Peacock's masterly exposition of the pledges which Government had entered into in 1791-93." Sir Frederick Currie can find no precedent in the arrangements lately made with zemindars in other provinces, to justify the making of a "public demand" on the landholders of a province where "a solemn act of the Legislature promised and declared" eighty years ago that no public demand should ever be made upon the said landholders in addition to the settlement then decreed. Not less certain is Mr. Ross Mangles that "the pledges given by Lord Cornwallis absolutely forbade the imposition of a novel tax, cess, or rate (call it by what name you will) upon the zemindars of Bengal alone, for any purpose whatever;" not even for the construction of roads. The whole of Sir F. Halliday's able minute evidently points the same moral, conveyed indeed through the lips of the Bengal zemindars, who are described as pleading "the distinct and solemn promises of the permanent settlement of 1792, when Lord Cornwallis had exhausted the resources of language to assure them that the rate then assessed on their lands was 'irrevocably fixed for ever,' and that they should in all future time be free from 'any further demand of rent, tribute, or any arbitrary exaction whatever.'"

But are there no precedents drawn from recent times and various parts of India, that might seem to warrant the levying of a special cess in Bengal, in the teeth of arrangements made eighty years ago? The dissentients of the Indian Council refuse to see any such, either in the income-tax of 1860, or in the special cesses now raised in the North-West Provinces, the Punjab, Oudh, Central India, and elsewhere. Agreeing with the Government of Bengal, Sir Frederic Halliday denies all analogy between these cesses and the new tax demanded from the Bengal zemindars. The former have been levied with the express consent of all who pay them, except in Bombay, where the Government has acted "in defiance of precept and precedent." In all such cases moreover the Government as joint owner has either shared the burden with the landholders, or virtually taken the whole of it on itself. Nor can the income-tax be fairly quoted as a plea for disregarding the promises of the Permanent Settlement. It was levied equally on all classes, as the Rajah of Burdwan pointed out at the time, in order to meet the new demands caused by the repression of the Great Mutiny. But to infer from a general tax imposed on all alike for a temporary purpose the right to levy a special tax for ever on one class alone seems to Sir Frederic a "peculiarly irritating and offensive" process. To the same effect argues Mr. Prinsep: "The income-tax imposed by Mr. Wilson in 1861 is not a precedent to encourage the belief that the Government may safely exercise this arbitrary power"—of unlimited direct taxation for any purpose it may deem good. Mr. Wilson only asked for temporary aid from all to meet a crisis of whose importance all were alike aware. "But here is an aid required for education, and another for roads" from a class which, in compliance with the promises of Lord Cornwallis, as confirmed by the Government and Parliament of his day, has never once been called upon for a single rupee on account of the land beyond the sum fixed for each estate in 1789.

Sir Erskine Perry scouts the logic that sees justice in the mere repetition of an unjust or arbitrary act. In his opinion local cesses for education have hitherto been levied either while the revenue officer was settling with the landowner the terms of his re-assessment, or else when the latter has sanctioned the additional impost of his free own will. Even the cess imposed in 1869 on the landowners of Bombay he regards as falling under one or other of these heads. Ever since 1837 the work of re-settlement has been going on there, the purpose of the Government to raise local cesses has been made known, and the acquiescence of the people has been assured. Sir Frederic Currie again can find "no sound and valid argument for the legality and justice of imposing a public demand on landholders alone," in the fact of the income-tax having been levied on "all classes and all persons possessing incomes." And who, he asks, is more especially bound to discharge the usual obligations of a landholder, than the Government which in 1793 received by law from the zemindars 90 per cent. of the net rental? Nor is it much less unjust, as Sir F. Halliday for one reminds us, to extend the cess in question from the zemindars alone to all holders of rateable property in land. A particular class will still be burdened for the good of the whole community. The arrangement sanctioned by the India Office appears to Mr. Eliot Macnaghten to "involve the injustice and absurdity of abstracting from the agricultural population alone the means of providing not only for the education of their own families and dependants, but also for the education of the families and dependants of their more wealthy neighbours, the fundholders and the capitalist generally."

Apart from the question as to the proper meaning of Lord Cornwallis's pledge to the zemindars, and from the alleged injustice of taxing one class for the good of all, not less decided are the arguments used by Sir F. Halliday and Mr. Mangles against the objects and timeliness of the proposed cess itself. Not content with the great progress made since 1835 in popular education from above downwards, the Indian Government, says Sir Frederic, is now bent on thrusting upon the masses a new scheme of primary instruction at an enormous cost, which it has called on the zemindars to defray. These gentlemen have lately paid half the entire expense of the existing village schools, but how much of that will they continue to pay, asks Mr. Mangles, under a compulsory cess on account of a system which reverses the normal course of things? Sir H. Montgomery likewise points to the uselessness of forcing on the masses, in defiance of our natural allies, the zemindars, "a measure not yet actually in force in enlightened England." To the same effect argues Sir E. Perry. And it is for such an end, say Sir F. Halliday and Mr. Mangles, that a new income-tax at least as heavy as the late one, "which has caused so much indignation," is to be laid upon the landed interest in Bengal.

Such is a succinct statement of the reasons alleged within the India Office against the tenor of the Indian Minister's Despatch. Of this latter document and the previous correspondence between the Indian and Bengal Governments we gave a pretty full analysis last year.* It is a pretty controversy as it stands, and there is plenty to say, as we have shown, on both sides of it. To decide when doctors so learned disagree is a task by no means easy of achievement. On the whole we are inclined to think that the victory in argument rests with the defeated party, and that both on grounds of principle and expediency the particular cess in question should not be enforced for the particular ends in view. It is surely unwise to run the risk of estranging the very classes who have hitherto done so much of their own free-will towards educating their countrymen, by taxing them alone for the support of a school-system disliked by the few and undesired by the many. The demand in Bengal for schools where English is taught has of late years been widespread. "The landholders, great and small, the mahajuns, traders, farmers, and persons in the upper strata of the agricultural class, are all coming forward"—says Baboo Joykisser Mookerjee in 1866—"from every direction with their mites, and soliciting the aid of Government in establishing vernacular and Anglo-vernacular schools;" the former being regarded merely as stepping-stones to the latter. The people in fact are already paying liberally for the sort of learning they prefer, to say nothing of the numerous village schools kept up by native money alone. But the new scheme threatens to dam up the stream of private charity by hurrying forward the instruction of the masses at the expense of the zemindar class and of the higher education which both Government and people have hitherto favoured. At the same time it is not clear that the cess in question would really violate the pledges of 1793, and it is certain that, whatever were the terms of the original assessment, the zemindars of to-day pay much less than their proper share towards the State revenue. There are times moreover when State needs may be held to override all other considerations, and it might even be a question how far the Government for the time being could bind its successors to a onesided bargain. But this is hardly the time for raising such a question or putting forward such an excuse.

ASSOCIATION IN AID OF SOCIAL PROGRESS IN INDIA.

A SOCIETY, consisting of both ladies and gentlemen, is being organised in London with the object of assisting and encouraging the efforts of individuals in various parts of India in behalf of social improvement and reform. It has been known that for a length of time indications of a more active intellectual life have manifested themselves in several of the chief cities of the peninsula. The influence of Western civilisation is daily becoming more apparent in the growing desire for education, and the increasing revolt against the institutions of caste and idolatry—so obstructive of all true national progress and happiness. Those natives of India who have been awakened to a sense of the prevailing superstition and degradation of their country, who have imbibed the ideas of English literature and science, and caught the spirit of our national life, feel keenly the obligation that rests upon them to do something in ushering in a better time. They are eager to occupy a position worthy of them and of the immense resources which a bountiful nature has placed within their reach. Hence one of their first attempts is in the direction of education, the training of competent teachers, and the establishment of schools. But immense difficulties of a local kind lie in the way; and it is one object of the new Association now being formed to second the native effort, and as far as possible extend its usefulness.

In the subjoined prospectus, issued as a preliminary step of the movement, the leading principles of the Association are clearly set forth. They are three-fold—1, co-operation with native reformers; 2, the awakening of a better knowledge of India throughout England; and 3, friendly intercourse with Indian gentlemen who come to this country in prosecution of their professional studies, or to learn our national habits and customs. This programme has been carefully drawn up, and embodies a spirit and principle that ought to succeed. Objections will be raised that it reflects upon the efficiency of missionary efforts towards the evangelisation of India; but rightly regarded it is promotive of missionary work. The other objection, that India has abundant resources in itself, and needs not the help of England, may be dismissed as futile, and, unfortunately, contrary to the sad facts of the case. The wealthy classes are too often indifferent and apathetic in subjects of social reform; they have not learned its importance, and those who have the will are not possessed of the means to carry out the work that is needed. Has England no duty in the matter? Does she derive no advantages from her Eastern possessions? Have we not one hundred and fifty millions of fellow-subjects in the various Presidencies of the peninsula, and what mission could be greater or more sacred than that of imparting what is best in English law, liberty, and intelligence to such vast and various peoples? Annexed is the Prospectus referred to; we shall gladly open our columns to chronicle the progress of a movement to which we heartily wish every success:—

Association in Aid of Social Progress in India.

London Branch.—Established 1871.

I. The object of this Association is to assist the movements towards social improvement now taking place in India.

II. Although the social progress of two hundred millions of people is an object of such vast dimensions that it may appear at first sight to be utterly beyond the scope of any association of individuals to aid it, yet it must be remembered that movements of this nature generally commence with isolated efforts, widening by degrees, till they embrace in their sphere of action whole communities of people.

III. The Committee are in possession of evidence that such movements have already begun, and that not from one, but from several indigenous centres in different parts of India. These efforts are clearly capable of being materially assisted by the action of an Association like that for which they now venture to solicit public support.

IV. It would, however, be difficult to obtain adequate support in aid of an object of this kind without a more general knowledge than is commonly met with in this country of the social condition of India, and of the attempts that are being made there towards improvement. One of the main objects, therefore, of this Association will be to impart information by means of lectures, conversaziones, correspondence, and intercourse with natives of India, and by the Journal of the Association.*

V. The objects of the Association, therefore, are the following:—

1. To impart information, with the view of awakening general interest in this country in the social condition of the people of India.
2. To assist the movements now in progress in various parts of India towards general social improvement, and especially at present in respect to female education, the encouragement of schools of arts and industry, and friendly intercourse between the English and the Indian races.
3. To obtain information from all parts of India where efforts are being made in furtherance of any of these objects, by means of correspondence with leaders of thought, and with reformers who are at present labouring, under enormous difficulties, in a field of unlimited extent.
4. To encourage as much as possible natives of India to visit England, and to assist those who do come to this country, by facilitating their introduction to English families, and affording them the means of becoming better acquainted, than they otherwise could be, with the domestic life of English people; so that they may acquire a taste for the habits and pursuits of refined society, and have opportunities of studying to the best advantage English ideas, institutions, and customs.

VI. As the main purport of the Association is to effect its objects by co-operation and intercourse between people differing in race and creed, it is obvious that, for all purposes coming within the scope of the Society's operations, the common ground of absolute neutrality, in regard to religion, is the only position that can be occupied.

VII. One branch of the Association already exists at Bristol, and another at Edinburgh; and it is hoped that in course of time branches will be established in other large cities.

VIII. The subscription to the Association is Ten Shillings and upwards per annum, which will entitle the Subscriber to all the privileges of membership. Associate Members subscribing Five Shillings per annum will be entitled to admission to Lectures, the Monthly Journal, and other privileges, except the right of voting.

IX. The names of Subscribers, Donations and Subscriptions, to be sent to either of the Honorary Secretaries, Miss E. A. Manning, 107, Victoria-street, Westminster; or the Rev. T. Hunter, 8, Queen-square, W.C.

* The Journal is at present published monthly at Bristol, and may be had on application to Miss Carpenter, Red Lodge House, in that city.

THE INDIAN HOME ACCOUNTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

Sir,—Sir Richard Temple tells the Indian public (I use your abstract of what he says), that the accounts of the Home Government, made out in fullest detail, are transmitted to India regularly month by month, and once a year these accounts are published in the Gazette of India, so that the Indian public may know as much about every item of home outlay as it does about the money spent in India, which is not saying much, according to General Balfour, who informs us that there are disbursed in India three millions sterling more on the military expenditure side of the budget than ought to be the case!

Seeing that the Supreme Government of India is really located in England, will you allow me to ask why, if the Secretary of State forwards his accounts month by month to India, the Governor-General of India should not submit his accounts to the Home authorities regularly at similar stated periods? That he does not do so is quite clear from the answer Mr. Grant Duff gave in the House to a member who asked for information as to what sums had, up to date, been expended on the Lahore and Peshawur State Railway. The Under-Secretary stated that he had no materials from which he could satisfy the hon. member's curiosity.

You may perhaps agree with me in thinking that in these days, when members of the House, which is beginning collectively to take a marked and intelligent interest in Indian affairs, asks for information about Indian affairs, the Home Government should at all times be in a position to answer any reasonable questions that may be asked, after due notice, as readily and correctly as do the other great Departments of the State. It seems very unsatisfactory for a great public officer to be obliged to reply that he cannot give the information required on any specific point because he has no materials to consult. I know that copies of all correspondence are forwarded regularly from India to England, why not copies of all accounts? Each Government might send its own portion. This subject might deserve brief attention at the hands of the recently appointed Indian Finance Committee.—Faithfully yours,

April 14, 1871.

THE YARKAND MISSION.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

Sir,—In his report to the Government of the Punjab regarding the Mission to Yarkand, Mr. T. D. Forsyth says that his instructions "were to go to Yarkund merely on a friendly visit to the Atalik-Ghazee, and for the purpose of opening up, and giving impulse to the trade with that country. The visit was not, in any sense, a mission, and had no political objects."

Mr. Grant Duff, Under Secretary of State for India, stated, on the other hand, in the following somewhat lukewarm remarks relating to the Mission, in his Indian Budget speech (24th February), that—"Mr. Forsyth, a Government officer, sent by Lord Mayo to the Court of the Atalik-Ghazee, the strong-handed chief who rules in Eastern Turkestan, met with but moderate success in his diplomatic capacity—the ruler whom he sought being far away from his capital, warring in the north. Still, Mr. Forsyth brought back a certain amount of commercial and other information which will not be without its use." How are we to reconcile the two statements?

My principal object, however, in writing to you is to ask whether the reports of the two natives detached by other routes than that followed by Mr. Forsyth himself have been received by the Secretary of State.

The first, we are told, was "Faiz Buksh Moonshee, who went round by way of Afghanistan, Badakhshan, and over the Pamir to meet us in Yarkand." Of the second we are told by Mr. Forsyth that, "hearing that Ibrahim Khan, whom he had sent through Yassin and over the Pamir Steppes to Yarkand, had arrived, and was kept in confinement, Mr. Forsyth sent a message requesting that he might be sent to him." We are also informed that Ibrahim Khan's account of a very interesting journey over a line of country almost entirely unknown, except, I believe, through the writings of Fa-Hian, a traveller of the fourth century, of which I pretend to no knowledge, but regarding which we may hope to be enlightened by our greatest living Oriental authority, Sir H. Rawlinson, will be given hereafter.

In concluding his lengthened report Mr. Forsyth passes the following remarks on the services of these two men:—"I would next notice the service rendered by Faiz Buksh. Having travelled through Afghanistan, Budakhshan, and across the Pamir to Yarkand, he arrived in time to take the place of my Moonshee," &c. "Ibrahim Khan undertook, at my request, a rather hazardous journey from Cashmere through Gilghit and Yassin and across the Pamir to Yarkand, and displayed great tact and acuteness in avoiding all difficulties by the way. Both his and Faiz Buksh's account of their travels are being translated, and will be submitted to Government hereafter."

Mr. Forsyth's Report was sent in on the 2nd December to the Punjab Government, and there has surely been time enough to have had the two narratives of Faiz Buksh and Ibrahim Khan translated and forwarded to England. If they have not been received I hope Sir Henry Rawlinson, who expressed his belief at the Royal Geographical Society's meeting in November, that the Chitral and Yassin route was the one into Yarkand, will inquire as to their whereabouts.

There is reason to believe they would offer much valuable information and create a revolution in the notions recently entertained as to the trade routes between India and Central Asia.

* * * * *

P.S.—It is somewhat singular that Mr. Forsyth, who must have heard of the lamentable occurrence on his way back from Yarkand, nowhere alludes to the murder of Mr. Hayward. It is a great pity that the map which is said to have accompanied the report has not been published with it, thus rendering the "Return to the Address of the House of Commons" incomplete.

Spirit of the Indian Press.

HINDOO WOMEN.

The Hindoo Patriot declares that female education is rapidly advancing in Bengal. There is scarcely a zenanna in the metropolitan districts, and we may say in some of the Eastern districts, which has an educated male member, but which is not receiving the light of knowledge. Each zenanna forms a domestic school, and education after a sort forms a part of the routine of the every-day life of the mother, the sister, the wife, or the daughter of the educated man. We do not pretend to say that this education is of the high order which would regenerate the country in a trice. When the education of our boys is so defective it is absurd to expect that that of our girls would be better. By far the majority of our boys learn only to smatter English, and with their inflated notions of progress, civilisation, and enlightenment they cannot be expected to give the right direction to the education of their sisters. At present that education, we must confess, is without any method or system. Some like to teach their better halves a smattering of English, in the hope of enjoying the luxury of conversing with them in that language. It may be easily imagined that their stock of English words is seldom richer than that possessed by their lords. Others delight to teach them Bengali books of the Brahma school, and while they themselves are ill able to appreciate, much less explain, the abstract ideas of religion, they contrive to destroy the primitive ideas on the subject, by which ou women have hitherto been governed, and unloose the moral hold which Hinduism had over them. Others, again, while acknowledging the advantages of education, teach their females only the sacred books of their ancestors, and thus seek to maintain the sway of orthodoxy over them. However divergent may be the lines of action, one thing is undeniable—there is activity in every direction. It will doubtless eventuate in substantial and healthy progress hereafter. But there are difficulties in the way, which foreigners are not able to appreciate. First of all there is the purdah, which cannot and ought not to be hastily rent asunder. There is a class of European philanthropists, who seem to think that the womankind of India would be regenerated if they were only dragged out of the zenanna. Nothing could be a greater mistake than this. When English education was first introduced in Bengal, a class of English philanthropists similarly thought that the stronghold of Hindu prejudice would be broken if the educated young men were taught to eat and drink forbidden food and drink, and so they were tempted to violate their caste, but has this freedom in eating and drinking furthered in the slighest degree the cause of real progress? The social and moral regeneration of the Hindus must pass through a certain course of sound intellectual preparation, which neither free eating and drinking nor the rash destruction of zenanna partitions would bring about. In our humble opinion the more complete the education of the men, the sounder will be the training of the women. One will necessarily react upon the other. Our customs and religion we admit are great drawbacks to female progress of the European standard, but it does not necessarily follow that we should in all matters copy the Europeans, for that such copying means only true civilisation. If the object of bringing our women under the influence of modern civilisation be to promote purity of life, devotion to domestic duties, religious zeal, and active benevolence, these qualities are already possessed by our women, and if anything, modern ideas, far from strengthening, are weakening those virtues. So far as moral culture goes, the present zenanna system chiefly contributes to it, though, of course, the moral standard of the Hindu somewhat differs from that of the Englishman, notwithstanding their coincidence on essential points. The Hindu woman lacks the intellectual culture, the literary grace, and the social conventionalities of the Englishwoman, but we dare say these sweetening accompaniments of life will come in good time. The present system of zenanna education, with all its defects, is a mighty lever of progress, and let it go undisturbed. Let not our ardent reformers or our European friends be impatient. The seeds of the good work have been sown and the harvest will come in its own time. One thing we must warn our European friends against; let them remember their own adage, that he who talks much often talks in vain. Those noisy men who are so ready to chatter on the platform or scribble in the newspapers long more for their own notoriety than care for the elevation of their sisters. They make a political capital of the subject, and they are naturally regarded with distrust and suspicion by the really thinking and influential portion of their countrymen. The cause of the progress of our women is our own concern, and we ought not to hanker for Government aid. That aid we must, in justice to our Government, say is not withheld from us; in fact, the grant-in-aid rules in respect of schools for girls are much more liberal than the same for those for boys; but if we do not help ourselves the Government cannot help us. The Government cannot drag our women out and shove, as it were, a dose of education down their throats.

THE CANAL ROUTE.

The Madras Athenæum asks whether the Suez Canal route to India has any special advantages? Within the last few days three steamers, the Scotland, Petersburg, and Atalanta, which came from England through the Canal, have in succession anchored in our roads. The order of their departure was exactly the reverse of that of their arrival. Contrary winds, severe weather, and (their consequence) disabled machinery, delayed one vessel; getting aground in the Bitter Lakes delayed another; and the Scotland, which made the passage from Liverpool in a trifle less than six weeks, was obliged simply to creep through the Canal, because a French frigate entered before her and was determined not to hurry herself. The Arcturus and one or two other steam-ships have certainly run the distance out very quickly, and beaten even Mail steamers, but, as a rule hitherto, it must be confessed that ships by the Suez Canal have no advantage over the P. and O. steamers in the shortness of their voyages. Still, what has been done by some may be done by others, and shipowners will best consult their interests by increasing the motive power of their ships, and making arrangements to obviate unnecessary detention in intermediate ports. One of the forementioned vessels was kept at Colombo two-and-a-half-days, although it did not take more than fifteen hours to disembark her cargo; and then, because there was no coal available in that port, she had to proceed to Galle, where the process of coaling occupied thirty-three hours! But though the Suez Canal route cannot yet be considered the quickest, there is reason to regard it as the most comfortable. Passengers embark at their port of departure and are not disturbed till they reach their destination. There is no landing amidst much discomfort in Egypt, travelling with as much discomfort by train across the Isthmus of Suez, and re-em barking with more discomfort still at the further port. There is no "breaking bulk" in the matter of luggage, nor any of the uncertainty, and injury, and loss which attend that process. The baggage of passengers is tenderly handled and not ruthlessly knocked about and broken by lascars, quarter-masters, and baggage-room officers on board, or by Arabs on shore. Invalids have not their last chance of recovery removed by the fatigues of the trajet across the desert. Children are not wearied and fretted and sickened by the exposure and inconveniences and indigestible food attendant upon the trying railway journey from Suez to Alexandria, and vice versa. To mothers with children, to old people, and to invalids, the Suez Canal must ever be the best and safest route. And now that the P. and O. Company have reduced their rates, if other companies and owners wish to allure all classes of passengers and make their ships more profitable, they must make them more expeditious. Speed seems to be the principal desideratum. We have learned that the food on board is ample and good, that children especially are fed better than on board the Mail steamers, and the wines, spirits, and liquors offered for sale are fair and moderately priced.

THE COTTON-TRADE OF INDIA.

The Delhi Gazette holds that if the increase of the produce supply in America only opens the eyes of those connected with the trade out here, and all come to learn that honesty is the best policy, India will have no cause to repent that there was a time when she ran great danger of losing this important branch of commerce, for we feel confident that if proper exertions be only now made, that she will be able to retain her share of the trade. This brings us to consider how this can be accomplished, and why we think so. The reply as to how we can retain our share of the trade is simply answered, for we have only to improve the agriculture. Government we are happy to observe is at last exerting itself in this most important branch, led by a Viceroy who from practical experience knows the benefit likely to accrue from improved agriculture. Is it to be wondered at when we know that he had not only a great personal interest in this question at home, but being fond of field sports he cannot but have had in his early days ample opportunities of seeing in his own country the advantages of good farming. India is therefore fortunate to have at the head of affairs a Governor General who is alive to this subject. We are much inclined to think that he will not be disappointed in his hope of making great improvement in a direction where it is so much needed. We have not yet answered how the growth of cotton is to be improved. There are several experiments now in progress which promise to make great improvements, one of which we had occasion to make allusion to a short time ago, where the average yield by a simple method had been more than quadrupled. In this case irrigation was necessary, but we believe there are tracts where even this is not necessary; all that is required is to attend to proper drainage. Our reason for arriving at this conclusion is that, on a late occasion when travelling to the hills, we were much struck with the flourishing state of the cotton crops between Saharunpore and the foot of the Sewaliks. The villagers say that the yield is about 120 lbs. of clean cotton per acre, or nearly double the average of all India. The breadth of the track is about a dozen miles extending all along the foot of the hills, for we believe the same superiority has been observed at other points similarly situated. There must be some reason for this superiority over other localities. The most striking point is the facility for surface drainage, for instead of the country having only a slope of one or two feet in the mile, it has fully ten times this slope. This at once shows that proper drainage is an important matter; but there are other features which were observed. At the end of December, when the cotton pods near Delhi were being shrivelled up, along this track they were blooming, which is to be accounted for by the fact that near the foot of the hills the frost at night is not nearly so severe as it is at fifty or a hundred miles more south of them. This is known to every one, for who does not know that ice is much more easily made at stations some distance from the hills than at those in their vicinity. Along this track, therefore, which cannot be under a thousand miles in length and about a dozen broad, we appear to have soil and climate fitted to yield favourable returns even with the present wide system of agriculture, while we are also taught the lesson that improved surface drainage is important. Let us now consider what the future yield of clean cotton will require to be to secure a proper remuneration to the cultivators. We cannot expect more than sixpence a pound in Liverpool for cotton from India, unless the staple be greatly improved. Thus deducting one-third for transport and all other charges, not more than fourpence can reach the cultivator for what he sells. As he has to give to his coolies part of the crop for picking, cleaning, &c., it will require a yield of from 120 to 150lbs. an acre to secure the cultivator Rs. 20 for that area. Much less than this will hardly pay in these days. So there remains nothing for it but doubling the yield, if we are to retain the European cotton trade.

MILITARY.—We take the following from the Pioneer:—"The Mofussilite wishes to know why we have maintained a 'discreet silence' about 'the state of the 104th Regiment at Allahabad;' for our contemporary has, so it says, 'reason to believe' that the condition of this regiment is such as to be 'deserving of censure.' Sickness, the Mofussilite knows, has visited the regiment, 'which is attributable to the exposure to which it has been subjected.' It will be sufficient for us to say that the Mofussilite cannot 'know' this. The hospital returns of the 104th for the present year are now before us, and from these we learn that the health of the troops is very satisfactory. More than this, the percentage of admissions to hospital from the detachment in the Fort has during the last two weeks (the only weeks in which the heat has been uncomfortable) been higher than that of admissions from the rest of the regiments under canvas. Finally, the admissions during the past week—March 3rd to 10th—from the men under canvas were fewer than in the week immediately preceding. These facts place, we hope, the matter beyond further misrepresentation.

NOT AN ADVERTISEMENT.—A few nights ago a gentleman returning along the Grand Trunk Road to Raneegunge in a palkee was suddenly awakened by his bearers dropping his palkee in the middle of the road and screaming out, "Bear, bear." On looking out, he saw a bear within a few yards of the palkee. Unfortunately the traveller, being of a peaceable disposition, carried no more effective arms with him than a drawing-room pistol, which was considered sufficient to inspire terror amongst the natives of Bengal. But Bruin was not to be so easily terrified, and he approached the palkee. The traveller's first thoughts were to appease his enemy, and having a small stock of refreshments with him, he threw out a hard-boiled egg as a token of friendship. This Bruin shortly consumed, and then appeared closer to the palkee, like Oliver Twist, asking for more. The pistol then appeared the only safeguard, and as Bruin's inquisitiveness led him close to the palkee doors, the traveller made up his mind to do or die in the attempt to kill the bear with that weapon. Waiting till the bear came close to the small aperture left open between the palkee doors to watch the enemies' movements, the traveller raised his fatal weapon and fired at Bruin's eye. The result was nil. Again the bear sniffed at the small aperture, as if in search of another egg or something more substantial in the shape of human flesh. Happy thought! Wild animals dread fire. Seizing a box of Bryant and May's fuses, the traveller struck two or three of them on the box, and thrust them through the aperture into Bruin's nostrils. Happy result! Bruin fled. Traveller escaped. Moral.—Always carry Bryant and May's fuses. This is not an advertisement, but a fact.—Englishman.

STATION TALK.

SIMLA, March 8.—On Sunday last a murder was committed near Jutog. It appears that a native washerman went down to the stream in the valley to wash clothes; he had some ornaments on his person; they were, however, of little value; these must have tempted the avarice of some fellow or fellows, who killed the dhobee with cuts of some sharp instrument on the head and body, and decamped. The body of the deceased was found, but the murderers have escaped. There was a muster parade, the first of this year, of the Simla Volunteers on the 4th; it was very well attended. There are about forty or fifty members at present in the station, and nearly the whole of that number were on the ground. The Volunteers were marched round Stirling Hill, a party sent up to the summit to garrison the "castle" there, while another portion had to take the place by storm, which was gallantly done. The whole of the body went through their manœuvres in capital style. There has been an attempt to get up a band among the members of the Volunteers, and some names were put down, of such as were willing to lend their instrumental aid, but I believe the scheme is not likely to come to a head.

LUCKNOW, March 12.—The Maharajah of Puttiala is expected shortly. He will stay four days and then proceed to his capital. Lord Mayo will be here on his way to Simla by the 5th proximo. His Lordship will, I believe, remain for a week. The Talookdars have been instructed to be present by the commencement of next month. Nawab Hyder Ali Khan has made a present of one hundred rupees towards female education. This prince, who is the brother of the Nawab of Rampore, is a most liberal-hearted person, and has made himself very popular. The weather is nice and pleasant, but during the day it is warm. The rural sports are over, and there is no more amusement in store for us.

HILLS NORTH OF DEYRAH, March 13.—Our winter may be safely pronounced to have sped away; one of the very mildest experienced in these diggings for the past quarter of a century. Spring with rapid strides is advancing, the weather being just now exceedingly balmy and agreeable. A clime such as we are now revelling in is probably not to be found in the wide continent of India. Visitors are dropping in daily; ere long our late deserted roads and thoroughfares will be teeming with busy life. Houses are said to be in great demand, speaking volumes for the public estimation our far-famed and charming Mussoorie is so deservedly held in. Report says the Governor-general will probably drop in upon us on his way to Simla, via Deyrah and Chukrata. Many big wigs of note contemplate summering amongst us. Undoubtedly 1871 will be a brilliant season for eclipsing Simla, as Mussoorie generally does. A system of the most approved sanitation is to be enforced this year, preventing the remotest possibility of any "plague spots" being permitted to exist upon our enchanting sanitarium. A pamphlet has been lately published by a worthy son of Esculapius, pointing out the serious consequences likely to result from the neglect of sanitary measures. Our municipal commissioners must therefore be on the qui vive to prevent any responsibility of so grave a nature being fathered upon their august body. "A stitch in time saves nine;" at the same time, the present age, backed with its many innovations, improvements, and scientific attainments, will find sanitation a difficult task in any hill station from the simple fact of law-breakers being always too ready to take advantage of any laxity of rules to evade the municipal laws. Nothing but a most efficient staff, with an experienced sanitary officer ever on the alert, will succeed in keeping the station up to the mark. I mentioned the late case of poisoning; the delinquent, a tailor by trade, is undergoing his trial by the Superintendent of the Dhoon, Mr. Ross; the culprit acknowledges having administered a powder to the deceased, but of what nature, and from whom and whence obtained, has not transpired; but doubtless the secret will be wormed out of him in due time, and may probably lead to some startling disclosures the public do not anticipate. A fire took place in cantonment last evening on a small scale; had it spread it might have been attended with disastrous results; it was fortunately speedily extinguished. Our postal hours have been changed lately, the down-country post coming in about two P.M., and leaving at six P.M., thus enabling important letters to be answered on the day of receipt. When will Government sanction a post-office worthy of Mussoorie? The present small building representing ours is for all the world like an Irishman's cabin! Our public schools are once again open for the reception of the rising generation; they are receiving pupils by the score daily. So much for go-ahead Mussoorie.—Delhi Gazette Correspondent.

Miscellaneous.

THE DURAND MEMORIAL.—The Lahore paper states that the Rajah of Kuppurthullah has given a donation of one thousand rupees to the Durand Memorial Fund.

Legislative.—Mr. L. A. Goodeve has been appointed Secretary to the Bengal Legislative Council.

Rangoon.—The trade between Rangoon and Bhamo is progressing most satisfactorily.

Assam.—The Pioneer states that it has been decided that Assam is to be converted into a Chief Commissionership.

Calcutta University.—The Convocation of the Calcutta University was held at the Town-hall on March 18. The only novel feature was the attendance of about eight Brahmo ladies.

The Coming Census.—The Supreme Government has approved of a proposal for the classification of the money-trading classes, in the general census of 1871.

New Tramway.—The construction of a wire tramway from the Mayo Mines to Miani, in the salt range of the Punjab, has been sanctioned by the Government of India.

The Pattialah Rajah.—H.H. the Maharajah of Pattialah, before leaving Calcutta the other day, gave £700 towards the maintenance of certain of its charities.

Gas for Jeypore.—One effect of the late visit of the Maharajah of Jeypore to Calcutta has been a resolution on the part of his Highness to light his capital with gas, and to introduce municipalities in all his principal towns.

The Garrison of Fort William.—Four companies of the 22nd Native Infantry, at present stationed in Fort William, having been sent to Dacca, it is reported that the remainder of the regiment will be transferred to Barrackpore, their place in the Fort being taken by the 13th Native Infantry.—Englishman.

Lord Napier of Magdala.—"The Commander-in-Chief," remarks the Pioneer, "seems to be as much in his element outside of a horse now as when twelve years ago he hunted the Mahratta soul out of Tantia Topi. The other day, when at Cachar, he rode over to Monierkhall to inspect the scene of the alleged misbehaviour of the 4th N.I. detachment, and back again the same day—a distance of fifty miles. And such roads!"

The late Lieutenant Spottiswoode.—Lieutenant Spottiswoode, of H.M.'s 107th Regiment, as he was bathing in the tank near the officers' mess at Dumdum, was seized, so it is supposed, with cramp, and though a good swimmer was drowned. This is the second death in the 107th by drowning within the week, Private McLoughlan having been drowned in almost precisely the same way a day or two previously.

Distribution of Troops in Cachar.—Our Dacca contemporary hears that the Head-Quarters of the 4th B. N. I. will probably be moved to Nowarbund in a day or two; and that the force at Chargola, consisting of eighty-five men of the 4th B. N. I. under Captain Palmer, is to be augmented to one hundred and fifty men, to which end Captain Lightfoot and a party of the 44th N. I. have been despatched.—Englishman, March 22.

Prize for Shooting.—His Excellency Lord Napier of Magdala's Cup, value £100, for shooting, has been won by the 2nd battalion 25th Foot. It becomes the property of the sergeants' mess of the winning regiment, while the entrance money paid by competitors, of whom there were nearly two thousand, is distributed according to their performance among the best individual marksmen. A man of the 19th Regiment has gained the largest sum.

Police.—It is reported that the Police Administration of the North-east frontier of Bengal is to be transferred from the Inspector-General of Police, Lower Provinces, to the Commissioner of Assam from the 1st of April next. All internal arrangements relative to the organisation and economy of the aforesaid force on the Eastern frontier will, in future, be made by the Commissioner, while all appointments in the department, as heretofore, will be made by the Government of Bengal.

The Thanks of Government.—The Bengal Times says:—"Government has thanked Messrs. Daly and Eglinton for the promptitude and courage with which they acted during the late Loshai raids in Cachar. Our young and wealthy fellow-townsman, Khajeh Ahsanoollah, also has been thanked for placing his steamer, Star of Dacca, at the disposal of Government to carry troops to Daudkhandy en route to Hill Tipperah, to intercept the recent Kooki raids in that direction."

Native Superstition.—We learn from the local journal that fourteen miles from Cuttack lies Bhubaneshwar, one of the most ancient seats of the Hindoo religion, where doubtless in olden days the rites of superstition were celebrated in highest carnival. From one of these ruined shrines has risen to the gaze of the Ooriyahs a so-called Avatar of Juggurnath, whilst a simultaneous manifestation of his brother Balbhadra has appeared at Puri itself. Crowds have flocked to behold this incarnation of the deity who pretends to possess supernatural attributes, and actually does possess—a very long tongue. Among other things, he predicted that as soon as ten thousand monkeys should enter the sacred precincts of the temple at Puri the English Government would collapse, and a Rajah would come from the south; but, alas! his words trembled on the verge of sedition, and, through the wakeful ear of a policeman, led to his being immured in the Khurda lock-up, from whence in due course he will be transferred to the Cuttack jail.

The Study of Anatomy.—The Pioneer says:—"The hakeems of Lahore have been persuaded to commence the study of anatomy, about eighteen of them having on a recent occasion attended at a dissection. This triumph is credited by the Indian Public Opinion to the lectures lately instituted at the Punjab University and the spread of the Urdu Medical Gazette."

Death of Lieut. Williamson.—The death of Lieutenant H. S. Williamson, 1st squadron officer of the 5th Bengal Cavalry, seems, says the Pioneer, to have excited a deep feeling of regret at Nowshera, where it occurred. He was thrown from his horse while out hawking, and died the following day. Mr. Williamson entered the Staff Corps from the 5th Lancers only a short time ago; he had passed an examination in Punjabee, and obtained a prize for "high proficiency" in Hindi. He was much esteemed in his regiment by both officers and men.

Another Escaped Prisoner from the Raiders.—The Bengal Times says:—"Pooran Chung, a female Kooki of Hill Tipperah, who was taken captive with her little daughter from her baree by Kooki raiders, contrived to effect her escape from the custody of her captors, and has arrived at home after five days' wandering through the jungles, carrying her girl all the while on her back. It appears from her statements before the authorities in Tipperah that half the raiders belong to the Darlong and half to the Kacha Kooki tribes. She also gives an account of the human sacrifices made by them."

Mr. Hogg's Adventures.—Mr. Hogg's friends will be somewhat comforted to read the following regarding that gentleman's interview with Arabs somewhere beyond Bagdad:—"Far from leaving our Officiating Director-General of Indian Post-offices 'naked in the middle of Arabia' (Bagdad, by-the-bye, being hardly in Arabia), they not only left him his clothes, but, after grave consultation, his boots and camel too. If they evinced any want of consideration it was perhaps in not leaving him enough to eat—since the restitution of one of his own cheroots, and a single glass of brandy, though delicate and even chivalrous, scarcely constituted a satisfactory commissariat."

Lord Mayo.—Grand preparations were being made at Lucknow for the approaching visit of Lord Mayo. The Body Guard, under the command of Colonel Deland, was to arrive by the end of the month. They will encamp near the old residency. Lord Mayo, accompanied by Major O. T. Burne, Private Secretary, and Colonel Rundall, was to leave Calcutta on the evening of the 2nd April for Beehea (on the E. I. Railway), from whence they would proceed to inspect the Soan irrigation works at Deyree on the 3rd and 4th. On the 5th his Excellency would proceed, via Sasseram, to Mogul Serai, where he would take the midnight train for Allahabad, arriving at six o'clock on the morning of the 6th, on which day the rest of the Council were to meet the Governor-General here. Lady Mayo would, it is believed, halt for rest at Benares, and join the Viceroy at Cawnpore, the whole party proceeding to Lucknow on the evening of the 8th April.

A Good Story.—The following story, whether true or not, is too good to be lost. We find it in the Lahore paper:—A certain gentleman was recently appointed to a station not a thousand miles from the capital of the Punjab. After a short time he submitted his accounts according to rule to the head office. The various bills of receipts and expenditure were being rapidly passed, when a clerk of unnatural brilliance pounced on a bill in which twenty thousand bricks were charged for twice over. The question was at once sent to the gentleman, whether he had got altogether forty thousand bricks on such a date, and, if so, why he had divided the item into two. "Oh, dear no," he said, "I only got twenty thousand bricks, but you told me to put everything down by double entry, so I put the bricks down twice. All the other charges are the same!" To the horror of the whole department it was found only too true. The receipt side was then examined, but it was consoling to find that with an instinctive acumen worthy of a higher appointment, the gentleman had here limited himself to single entry.

Exciting Sport with a Tigress.—A correspondent, writing from Caragolah under date the 12th March, says:—"A shooting party has just broken up, after beating the southern jungles of Purneah for several days. The party were nearly the same that two years ago beat the same covers and bagged eight tigers in seven days. This year they were less successful. However, they got four tigers, one of which (a tigress) showed great sport, charging four elephants one after another. She got on the head of a howdah elephant, dug her claws into the mahout's calf, and would have had the man off but for a timely shot from the howdah that knocked her down. She was up again into the back of another howdah elephant; the occupant was nearly pitched out. He fired his gun, pistol fashion, holding on with one hand, when she let go the howdah ropes she was holding with her teeth. Besides the four tigers, they had a good bag of buffaloes, deer, and pigs. A male buffalo charged right and left, making good his charge on one of the elephants, burying his horn some inches deep in the elephant's flank."—Indian Daily News.

The Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab.—Indian Public Opinion says:—"The Lieutenant-Governor and his party were, by latest accounts, at Bahadar Kheyl, the Salt Mines in the Kohat district, where they had been stopped by rain on the 12th. The Lieutenant-Governor is now approaching Peshawur, from which it was at first expected he would have returned to Lahore. We regret to say that this is by no means certain. It is indeed more probable that the tour will be continued to Yoozufzai, Huzara, and the Agror Valley. If this be the case, the camp will remain out till the beginning of May. However disappointing to the Lahore residents, the political advantages of this course would be very considerable. Already much has been done. The Lieutenant-Governor's tour has been most exhaustive. He has gone along the frontier just under the hills, and has visited every fort and militia outpost. He has planned with the General Commanding an improved line of defence. The militia of the whole border was found to be in a thoroughly inefficient state, and is now being entirely reorganised. The police will be remodelled, somewhat on the Cis-Indus system, except that the Deputy-Commissioner and Commissioner will have the powers that Inspector-General and Deputy-Inspector-General of Police have in Cis-Indus."

The Military Controller-Generalship.—It is reported that the respective claims of Colonel Atkinson, Controller of Military Claims, Bengal, and those of Colonel Barr, holding the same appointment at Bombay, to succeed to the Military Controller Generalship, are now before the Government. It is no disparagement to the latter official to assert that upon every principle of equity the preference should be given to Colonel Atkinson. Removed from the Military Secretariat, where his ability and honesty of purpose were fully recognised, to make room for Colonel Norman, whose claims overtopped all considerations whatever, we trust that there is no chance of a second hardship being done to Colonel Atkinson. Accepting in frank and soldierly spirit his transfer from the Secretariat to the Controllership of Military Accounts, he has laboured since 1862 in a large and common-sense spirit to carry out the views of Government and to reduce to order the unavoidable contradictions springing from a radical change in the character of the old and new Indian armies, and the regulations applying thereto. The introduction of the present improved forms of account and procedure in the Military Finance Department, by which much labour and many baboos have been economised, is entirely due to Colonel Atkinson. It is true, we believe, that Colonel Barr is, departmentally speaking, Colonel Atkinson's senior, but not so if general service rendered to the public be permitted to reckon for anything in the total account.—Englishman.

Indian Harbours.—About two years ago, very shortly after Lord Mayo's arrival in India, his Excellency, being impressed with the want of attention given to the minor harbours of India, addressed the Secretary of State on the subject, requesting that a civil engineer, having a special knowledge of such matters, should be sent out to this country to examine and report on the chief minor harbours, with a view to the Government of India seeing if it was practicable to do anything towards their improvement, and so facilitating the operations of the export trade of the country. The result of this proposal was that the Secretary of State sent to ask the opinion of the Board of Trade, and that this valuable department replied in a letter which explained what a harbour was, and that if attempts were made to construct harbours without proper care and thought there might be a serious waste of money, and generally indulged in namby-pamby platitudes of the most nonsensical order. The Secretary of State, however, seems to have been much impressed with the value of the advice, for he sent a copy of it to India, and did not send an engineer. The Governor-General did not submit to this treatment of a proposal which he thought of much public importance. A reply was sent to the Secretary of State, again pressing for the engineer, and pointing out the absurdity of the Board of Trade's lecture. The Secretary of State still did not comply with the request, and difficulties were made as to the possibility of finding an engineer whose opinion should be of sufficient value for the amount of remuneration which the Government of India had named as in their opinion suitable. Lord Mayo, however, still persevered, and the result was that, after another deliberate attempt to resist, a gentleman was engaged for the duty, and came out to India in November, and is now engaged in examining the coast of the Madras Presidency. —Englishman.

Military.—It is reported, says the Englishman, that Major Stubbs, R.A., commanding at Attock, is about to be attached to the Judge-Advocate General's Department. Major Stubbs is now, and has been for some time past, engaged in the preparation of a history of the services of the British Artillery in India,—services which for uninterrupted brilliancy are unrivalled. Distinguished for its hard fighting proclivities, the Artillery of the late Company was even more remarkable for the high tone and character it evinced as a service. And this, too, at a period when army discipline and army morale were none of the highest.—The Pioneer confirms the report that the 38th Regiment, which has been suffering so severely from fever in Peshawur, is to march immediately for Rawul Pindee. The 6th Royal Regiment from Rawul Pindee relieves the invalid regiment at Peshawur; this move takes place in consequence of the representations made to the Right Hon. the Commander-in-Chief by the Deputy Inspector General of Hospitals, after his recent rapid visit to the unhealthy valley. Of the Peshawur garrison between six hundred and seven hundred men will this hot season be located at Cherat. Huts for their accommodation and all necessary arrangements are being now prosecuted at the latter place.—The Mofussilite learns that some changes will shortly take place in the Staff at Umballa. It is rumoured that Major Fortescue is to proceed to Europe on furlough, and that Captain Robertson is to become his locum tenens. It is also said that Captain Lambert contemplates leaving for Europe.—The Delhi Gazette announces that General B. Taylor, from Lucknow, will take the command of the Umballa Division, on General Fordyce proceeding to England next month. General Beatson was expected to go to Umballa, but is now to stand fast at Allahabad, to enable him to revise and complete his Code of Dress Regulations, under the immediate supervision of the Adjutant General of the Army in Calcutta. On its completion, General Beatson will take two months' privilege leave; on its expiration he will leave for England.

Shabbiness.—That pay and privileges are gradually being cut down to such an extent that the advantage of entering the Indian Service, with all its risks and drawbacks, becomes every day more and more questionable, educated young men are beginning to see. Ex post facto regulations are always unjust. Those who enter the Service with the prospect apparently guaranteed of certain benefits, have a right to complain if new rules abridging the benefits are made applicable to them. There are many now in India who feel that they have this cause for dissatisfaction, but who know at the same time that they have no more chance of redress than a Russian peasant has of being able to resist an imperial ukase. Hitherto certain members of her Majesty's Indian Service have been privileged to send home at par, under the name of "Family Remittances," to their wives, children, and other nearest relatives, so many rupees per annum. By a new rule, every person sending home such a "Family Remittance" will lose about £4. 7s. on every hundred pounds sterling. This, like the income-tax, is just cutting by so much the pay which induced the individual to enter the Service. His appointment, in other words, is now worth so much less than it was. To apply the new regulation to all new-comers would be perfectly fair and unobjectionable, because they would come to India with their eyes open. At least their eyes ought to be open to the conditions under which they engage; if they are not, themselves alone are to blame. In the case to which we are now adverting, the saving to Government will be a mere trifle, and it will be effected by the abandonment of a principle which no Government can wisely ignore. To family men making heavy remittances to England for their wives and children, or perhaps for a widowed mother, the loss will be serious. We trust that the Government of India will reconsider an edict so obnoxious, so indefensible, and so little profitable. The enforced separation of families is hard enough to bear. Many found it difficult to make the ends meet before this curtailment of privilege. The difficulty is now increased by a shabby order, injurious to the Government which issues it, and provoking to the victims, unless it be rescinded.—Delhi Gazette.

Imports.—Calcutta, March 22.—The tone of our market has undergone little change during the past week, and we have, therefore, no particular feature of interest to notice. Grey Shirtings: Light makes continue in fair demand, without change in rates; the heavier makes have not altered since our last as regards values, but the tendency is, if anything, to weaker rates. Grey Jaconets: Low makes of 39-inch continue in good demand, and prices have slightly hardened; 44-inch goods have also improved somewhat during the week. Mulls have changed hands freely at last mail's quotations. Madapollams and T-Cloths are unaltered. Grey Twist: After our last a slight improvement took place, and a fair business was done, mostly in 40's, but the market again closes very quiet. Coloured Twist is very dull, and prices are weak.

Exports.—Calcutta, March 22.—Saltpetre: But few buyers have appeared in the market during the week, and prices have declined fully 2 or 3 annas. Calcutta refined is quoted Rs. 6-13 to 6-15; fine Crude, Rs. 7 to 6-15. Rice: There has been a better demand for white kinds, both for England and the Colonies, at from Rs. 3-3 to 2-10 for fine and middling. Wholesale prices in Burmah have also hardened, though the crop has been a large one, and we quote Rs. 57 to 51 per 100 viss. Linseed: There have been a few transactions both for England and America at slightly yielding rates. Prices average—for good bold, Rs. 4-9 to 4-4; good middling, Rs. 4-3 to 4-1; and small (new), Rs. 4-2 to 3-15. Rapeseed: There has been a good demand and fair amount of business transacted at prices ruling from Rs. 4-8 to 3-15. Teaseed has been in little demand during the week, and buyers have not come forward even at a reduction. We quote—white, Rs. 5-4 to 5-2; black, Rs. 4-12 to 4-8. Poppyseed: The supplies in the market are nearly exhausted. Rates remain unaltered at Rs. 4-4 to 4-2 for North-West Provinces grain. Jute: Baled jute has been firmly held, and the holders show no disposition to yield in prices; 3,500 bales of the best marks have been taken up for America at from Rs. 27 to 19-4 per bale, whilst select cuts may be quoted at from Rs. 16-8 to 15-8. Raw Silk: There are but few buyers in the market, the sales for the week not having exceeded 37 bales of sound, at a decline of 1 rupee from last quotations, or Rs. 20 to 18. There is a demand for good cocoons at Rs. 80, but there are none in the market. Silk Piece Goods: The stock of corahs both in the market and in the manufacturing districts is estimated at 50,000 pieces, but buyers refuse to deal at the present high rates, and quotations remain the same as last week at from Rs. 170 to 120 per corge.

Madras.

The Acting Commander-in-Chief.—General Shubrick has selected his staff as follows:—Major Graeme (his present aide-de-camp), Military Secretary, and Major Forster (Military Secretary to the last Commander-in-Chief), aide-de-camp. Major Hill has also been appointed an aide-de-camp.

A New Way of Rearing Elephants.—The astounding information is conveyed to us by a Burmese paper that a young white elephant, recently captured, "is being suckled by females who are forced by the Mandalay authorities to perform this maternal office to the animal, whilst their own children are given away to other women to nurse."

Cholera.—Some rumours were current lately that cholera had broken out on the Neilgherries, but the Commissioner, Mr. Brooks, has just reported to Government that they are altogether unfounded. We regret to learn that in the town of Cuddapah cholera of a virulent type is now prevalent; an official report just received from the Magistrate states that the disease is likely to continue in an epidemic form for some time to come.—Madras Times.

Return Passages for Europeans.—The Madras Athenæum says that the Supreme Government have decided that in future European civilians entitled by the terms of their agreement to a return passage to England, at the expiration of their term of service, will be required to avail themselves of this right within three months after leaving Government employ, otherwise they will forfeit all claim to passage for themselves or their families at the cost of the State.

Military.—The Supreme Government have sanctioned a disbursement of twenty-five thousand rupees for providing gymnasium apparatus for the use of British troops in the Madras presidency. It is said to be in contemplation to abolish the appointments of the Adjutant-Generals of the Bombay and Madras Armies, and that only Deputy-Adjutant-Generals will be appointed to each of the presidencies under the orders of the Adjutant-General of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief of India.

Mirage at Ootacamund.—The South of India Observer had the gratification of witnessing a splendid mirage in Ootacamund. The morning was very clear, the bright blue vault of sky being only here and there broken by a bank of white cloud. Just above one of these cresting the summit outline of the Khoondas the hills were reflected. The rise and fall and configuration of the hills was most exactly and faithfully represented, and at one time the very divisions of the fields were clearly seen.

Loss at Sea.—The barque Veronica, bound from Madras to London, has been burned at sea. The crew were saved by the ship Planet.

Telegraphic.—Before the Madras Government have migrated to the Neilgherries this year Ootacamund will most probably have been placed in direct telegraphic communication with Madras. The Director General has ordered a survey to be made of the Coonoor Ghat, and should the line be sanctioned by the Imperial Government operations will commence forthwith. The Railway Company will carry their wire to Kullar, whence the Government line will start and proceed, spanning many a ravine to Coonoor, Wellington, and Ootacamund.

Elephant Shooting.—A correspondent of a Madras paper states that a friend of his bagged two very large "tuskers" with an "express" rifle. The projectiles were hardened solid bullets, not the ordinary loaded bullet, or shell, either of which would be useless against the hide of a pachyderm, as they would expand and explode without penetration. For these solid bullets a special mould is required, for they ought to be of the same weight, or as nearly so as possible, that the rifle's trajectory may be the same, otherwise inaccurate shooting would result.

Tonnage on the East Coast.—The scarcity of tonnage on this coast is causing much inconvenience, the quantity of produce in godowns in the northern ports waiting ships being very great. From Pondicherry we hear that the Meinam arrived from Calcutta quite full, and in consequence some hundreds of chests of indigo for Marseilles, and a quantity of cotton for China, had to be rejected there. On the Malabar Coast the same difficulties are felt from want of tonnage. It seems strange that the Messageries Maritimes should have a fleet of twenty or thirty steamers lying idle at Marseilles when they might get valuable cargoes in India.—Madras Mail, March 16.

Bombay.

Bushire.—The famine in Bushire is abating, owing to a fall of rain and large importations from India.

Earthquakes.—Earthquakes have been felt during the past week at Beypore, Broach, Fyzabad, and Gondah.

Loss at Sea.—The Bombay coasting steamer Tilly has been totally wrecked, crew and passengers saved.

The New Inam of Muscat.—Syed Toorkee has been left in peaceable possession of Muscat, and the neighbouring chiefs have all tendered their allegiance.

Educational Department.—It is stated by a native contemporary that Mr. Bühler has been confirmed in his appointment of Educational Inspector, N. D.

Shipment of Cotton from Bombay.—During the month of February last, 56,496 bales of cotton, valued at Rs. 6,261,227, were shipped from Bombay.

CIVIL.—It is said by a Calcutta contemporary that considerable reductions are likely to be made in the Alienation Settlement Department of the Northern and Southern Divisions of Bombay, and that Lieutenant-Colonel Etheridge and Mr. Pestonjee, two valuable officers of the department, are to be provided for elsewhere.

NATIVE MUNIFICENCE.—The Rao of Kutch some time ago offered a lakh and a half of rupees for the purpose of establishing a High School in Mandavee, in commemoration of the visit of H. R. H. the Duke of Edinburgh to Bombay. The school has since been established; and his Highness the Rao has intimated his intention of giving R. 5,000 for a scholarship to be called after his Excellency Sir Seymour FitzGerald.

CIVIL ENGINEERS.—Captain W. H. Edgcome, R. E., Principal of the Madras Civil Engineering College, has been offered a Professorship in the new Engineering College to be established at home under Colonel Chesney. Captain Edgcome intends to accept the appointment, for which he is said by the Madras Mail to be admirably qualified. The pay of the Professorship is £600 a-year, with a house and other perquisites.

MILITARY.—Lieutenant-Colonel W. H. Goodenough, 9th Brigade R.A., Ahmedabad, has been ordered by telegraph to proceed at once to Woolwich to take command of a new troop of horse artillery which is to be added to the five batteries just sent home from India. —The head-quarters and squadron of the 1st Regiment Light Cavalry, consisting of three European officers, eight native officers, one hundred and seventy-five rank and file, and two hundred horses, were to arrive at Poona on the 25th March from Deesa.

UNUSUAL RAINFALL.—The rainfall in Ahmednuggur on the 14th, 15th, and 16th of February is officially stated by the Collector to have amounted to seven inches and fifty-two cents. It was attended by a high and excessively cold wind, so that 5,000 cattle and 50,000 sheep perished in the collectorate. The cattle were mostly the old animals, as a rule the young and healthy escaped. Besides cattle, parrots, sparrows and squirrels were found dead in considerable numbers.

EMBASSY FROM HOLKAR TO ENGLAND.—A native journal tells us that Ganesh Sittaram Shastri Sir Subha, Baxi Khuman Sing, and Khan Bahadoor Moonshee Ally Akbar, officers of H.H. the Holkar, are proceeding to England on State business. The first is a Brahmin, the second a Kshatriya, the third a Mahommedan. A fourth gentleman, a Brahmin, Mr. Sakharam Martand Reshimvale, accompanies the party as a mere traveller, without any grievance to lay before the authorities in England.—Times of India.

THE TAPTEE VIADUCT.—According to the Bombay Gazette, "the new viaduct over the Taptee, near Bhosawul, is to be commenced at once. For two years past the piers of the old bridge have been much cracked and patched up with iron bands, and the new viaduct is certainly not being commenced a day sooner than it was required. The new viaduct will be entirely of iron, Warren's girders supported by wrought-iron cylinders filled with cement concrete. The putting up of the viaduct has been entrusted to Messrs. Glover and Co."

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.—Lady and the Misses Spencer are expected at Gunnesh Khind House this evening, and are, we hear, going to leave to-morrow evening for Mahableshwur. His Excellency the Hon. Sir Augustus Spencer's stay at the presidency will be prolonged for a few weeks more, it is said, to be present at the ceremony of the uncovering of her Most Gracious Majesty's statue—the first of the kind on this side of India—the gift of his Highness the late Gaekwar. But it is mainly the assembling of the Legislative Council that is the cause of Army Head-quarters remaining at Bombay for the present.—Poona Observer, March 23.

RELIEF FOR THE SICK AND WOUNDED IN THE FRANCO-GERMAN WAR.—The German Consul at Bombay has received from the Committee of the Bombay Army the sum of Rs. 7,546-11-10, for the relief of the sick and wounded of the German Army, which amount he has remitted by the last overland mail at the exchange of 1s. 11d. per rupee in a bank bill on London, payable on demand, for £723. 4s. 7d., through the Chancellor of the German Empire to the Central Relief Committee at Berlin. The total amount remitted to Berlin by Mr. Gumpert since the commencement of the war is £2,187. 10s. 10d., including the contributions of the armies of Madras and Bombay.

A "HAPPY MAN."—The Gaikwar of Baroda has managed to get married at last. How the pretty women of the West have been fluttered for the past two months! Confidential agents have been ferreting out the damsels of the Deccan, examining the beauties of Broach, collecting together the daughters of Cutch—and all to chose a wife for the Gaikwar. One gentleman got together two hundred for H.H.'s inspection—two hundred pretty girls! and the great man did not fall in love with a single one of them. Then came another batch, another, and another: all went back disappointed. And now we are told Mulharao has chosen a wife. He has found a divine creature, with eyes large enough, lips red enough, waist small enough. We insist on his having her photographed at once, and sending copies to all "the leading journals." We demand it as a duty due to the hundreds of pairs of pretty eyes that have dimmed themselves with crying at—we presume they call it—"the bad taste of that horrid man the Gaikwar."—Pioneer.

JOHORE.—Italy has opened up commercial intercourse with Johore, the Rajah or Tumongong of which has been appointed a Knight Commander of the Crown of Italy.

THE MADRAS AND BOMBAY RAILWAY.—The Madras Athenæum of the 15th of March learns by telegram from Adoni that the line between Raichore and the north bank of the Tungabudra was opened successfully for public traffic on that morning.—The Bombay Gazette says:—"We are glad to hear that the temporary road across the River Kistna, at the G.I.P. Railway bridge site, is now completed, and that a locomotive engine can at last pass into the Raichore Doab. There remains now about a month's work to complete the laying of the rails up to the point of junction with the Madras Railway at Raichore station. The recent heavy floods in the River Kistna, which caused a rise of twenty-two feet above dry season low water, completely swept away the first road which was made across the bed of this great river, and thereby delayed the completion of the line by at least a month. The rails of the Madras line are already laid into Raichore, and the works have been recently inspected by the railway officials."

ARRIVAL OF THE TROOPSHIP "JUMNA."—The troopship Jumna, Commander F. W. Richards, arrived in harbour, with troops from England on March 24. She left Suez on the 9th. She brings the 72nd Regiment for Umballa; and small drafts of the 2nd battalion 1st Foot for Morar, 1st battalion 11th Foot for Morar, 37th Foot for Mean Meer, 105th Foot for Meerut, 15th Hussars for Mhow, 2nd battalion 24th Foot for Secunderabad, and 2nd battalion 49th Foot for Poona. Appended is a list of the officers, &c., who have come by the Jumna:—72nd Regiment:—Lieut.-col. W. Payne, C.B.; Majors M. Beresford, F. Brownlow; Capts. C. S. Clarke, wife and two children; Murray, wife and three children, Simpson, Sherlock and wife, Guinness, Urquhart, Kelsey, Tingcombe; Lieuts. Imports.—Bombay, March 25.—The business done this week has again been on a limited scale, but prices are unaltered. The steady feeling noticed in our last report continues, and there has been some demand on account of the interior. The slightly improved feeling is attributed to the firm tendency of the Liverpool Cotton Market, and to the belief that prices here are not now likely to decline any further. Grey Goods: The market has been steady, with little or no change in prices. Shirtings continue in good request. Bleached Goods continue dull, except for Mulls and inferior Jacconets, in which an advance of 2 to 4 annas has taken place. Sales as follows, viz. :—About 750 pieces Shirtings, at Rs. 5-4 to 5-7; about 8,000 pieces Jacconets, at Rs. 1-4½ to 5-2; and about 4,000 pieces Mulls, at Rs. 1-3 to 1-3½. Dyed and Printed Goods also continue dull; the sales which have transpired during the week are as follows, viz. :—About 2,000 pieces Cambrics, at Rs. 2-10 to 2-14; about 1,800 pieces Blue, Orange, and White Prints, at Rs. 4-4 to 4-6½; and about 500 pieces Orange Shirtings, at Rs. 5-5. Turkey Red Goods: Market continues active, but no change has taken place in prices. The following are the only sales which have been effected during the week, viz. :—About 6,400 pieces Cambrics, at Rs. 4-6 to 4-11; and about 2,000 pieces Mulls, at Rs. 3-12. Grey Yarns have continued dull, with a decline of ¼ anna per lb. Metals: The market has been steady, with no change in prices; and no sales have taken place during the week. Coals: Market continues very dull; the following cargoes have been sold during the week, viz. :—About 800 tons North Wales Main Steam, at Rs. 21½, alongside; about 500 tons West Hartley, at Rs. 22½ to 22¾, on bunder; and 100 tons ditto, alongside, at Rs. 20½.

Exports.—Bombay, March 25.—Cotton: By the telegrams during the week the Liverpool Cotton Market was dull and heavy, with Fair Dhollera at 5 13-16d. until the 22nd, when it improved one-sixteenth; and on the 23rd, the date of our latest telegram, the market was very firm, and Fair Dhollera stood at 6d. This telegram states that an early termination of the state of anarchy in Paris was expected, which, in face of large supplies, accounts for the advance. Merchants, however, will do well to remember the lengthened periods of anarchy which existed throughout France in former times after great political events, and to act on the probabilities of a similar state of things, if not of civil war, occurring now when the Government is manifestly weak. But the state of Europe appears to have no weight with merchants here, for so great is the competition that the smallest improvement in the tone of the Liverpool market forces up prices in India; and we regret to have to report that quotations in Bombay are again fully Rs. 5 per candy above those of last week, and show a heavy loss when compared with prices at home. The business done in Bombay for export aggregates about 5,000 candies, among which there were—of New Cotton, 2,100 candies of Oomrawuttee, at Rs. 164 to 175; 800 candies of Akote, at Rs. 173 to 183½; 535 candies of Machine-ginned Broach, at Rs. 184 to 193; 300 candies of Dhollera, deliverable in forty-five days, at Rs. 171 to 173; and 300 candies of Broach, at Rs. 177 to 181; and of Old Cotton, 200 candies of Dhollera and Bhowruggur, at Rs. 160 to 164; and 325 candies of Dharwar Sawginned, at Rs. 180 to 185. The market closes firm, with a good inquiry.

Below we append our quotations, viz. :—

	New.		Per Candy.
Oomrawuttee...			Rs. 174 to 175
Khandeish			150	160
Hinguughat			188	190

Home.

THE LATE MRS. MANNING.

A few further particulars respecting this excellent women, whose demise on the 1st inst., after a brief illness, was felt as a personal loss by a large circle of friends, will be received with mournful interest.

Mrs. Manning was born in the year 1803, and her early years were passed at Leyton House, in Essex. Her father, Mr. Isaac Solly, was a city merchant, and a man whose independent thought and generous sympathies were at the service of every progressive movement of his time. He took pleasure in collecting around him men of taste and culture, and his house was the resort of many eminent in various walks of life. Amongst his friends was the late Rajah Rammohun Roy, whose visit to England excited Miss Solly's interest in a high degree, and no doubt permanently influenced the direction of her mind to India in after life. The advantages of an intellectual home, which she had the good fortune to enjoy, including as it did her brothers, Samuel Solly, the eminent surgeon; and the Rev. Henry Solly, now of Hampstead, were favourable to her mental development; and her early delight was in literary study; especially of German, as well as in kindred artistic pursuits. Her first husband was Mr. Speir, a gentleman of high attainments in the medical profession, which however he subsequently gave up, in order to go out to Calcutta to superintend some mercantile concerns with which others of his family had been connected. After spending three years in India Mr. Speir's failing health induced their return to England, and he died a few years afterwards at Madeira. It was at this period she began her first work on India. There was much to fascinate a mind like hers in the old Sanskrit writings, and her residence in that great country had helped to fix her attention upon them. She instinctively delighted in whatever inspires the mind with elevated feeling, and the grandeur of the physical aspects of India had much impressed her imagination. She was never weary of recalling the splendour of tropical colouring, and the luxuriance of the trees and flowers which had come under her observation when abroad. Her industry and attainments were very remarkable, as abundantly evidenced by her "Life in Ancient India." The modest painstaking manner in which she collected the materials for this work, and the admirable way in which she presented them, were in some degree rewarded by the very favourable reception given to it when in 1856 it issued from the press. The Westminster Review, usually no indulgent critic, said:—"Mrs. Speir writes not only with genuine love of her subject, but with a vigour, a clearness, and an unpretentious thoroughness which raise her quite above the level of dilettantism." From anything savouring of the meaning indicated by the critic's last word she was absolutely free.

In the following year Mrs. Speir married again. Her second husband was James Manning, Esq., Q.C., the Queen's Ancient Serjeant, and son of the Rev. James Manning of Exeter, so well known in the annals of Nonconformity as the colleague and friend of Micaiah Towgood, and Kenrick, and Henry Acton, and Dr. Carpenter. Besides being a lawyer of great eminence in his profession, Mr. Serjeant Manning was distinguished by his vast stores of accurate and varied knowledge, and by his philosophical and literary tastes. The social attractions of her home and position did not, however, absorb the sole attention of Mrs. Manning. She again devoted herself to Sanskrit literature and its kindred subjects, but instead of bringing out a second edition of her book, she re-wrote it, adding a great deal of new matter which later researches rendered available. So much study was required to complete the work in the thorough style with which alone she could be satisfied to offer it to the public that it was not till 1869 that "Ancient and Mediæval India" appeared, in two goodly octavo volumes. No doubt the continued strain upon her energies, both physical and mental, was a severe trial of her strength; but the book remains a monument of a truly noble and conscientious life. The "Postscript" appended to the second volume is read with touching interest, and is too characteristic to be omitted:—"It is with reluctance (she says) that I bring these volumes to an end. I would rather work on, striving to make them more complete; but I feel that the most fitting duty for me at this moment is to let my work go forth, trusting it will be received with kind indulgence. If it prove useful to students I shall be glad; but much greater will be my satisfaction if it should induce some of those who live in India to make themselves more acquainted with the people and the literature of the land in which they seek a temporary home."

In 1866 Mrs. Manning again became a widow. For the last few years she lived in Victoria street, Westminster, devoting her cultivated powers and gentle goodness to the promotion of various philanthropic objects, in the enjoyment of the society and the esteem of a numerous circle of friends. By her liberality and wise counsel she contributed materially to the establishment of the College for Women at Hitchin. Last year, on the occasion of Keshub Chunder Sen visiting England, she took a warm interest in the reception given to the Indian Reformer, and opened her house to give him an English welcome in the truest sense. Her latest effort was given to the establishment of the "Association in Aid of Social Progress in India," now in course of formation in London, and was full of plans, at the moment of her removal, in order to commend it to public attention and to base it on wise and generous principles. With her, in conjunction with Miss Carpenter, of Bristol, the movement originated, and the promoters whom she had gathered around her now feel and deplore the loss it has sustained. Her powers of organisation and mild ascendency of rule were the strength of any new effort for good in its early struggling days.

The outward details of such a life were but the product and expression of an inner spirit. Her daily conduct was regulated by the guidance of broad principles, and she had a deep sense of the responsibilities which her many gifts and opportunities entailed upon her. In all her relations with others she was singularly just and true, as well as kind; from any tendency to conventionality she turned away; whilst her strong recognition of a common humanity underlying our various social grades and distinctions deepened and widened the courtesy and geniality natural to her.

The lesson and example of such a useful and beautiful career can be only salutary and refreshing.

THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN FINANCE.

The Committee held its third meeting on March 29, Mr. A. S. Ayrton in the chair.

Sir Robert Montgomery, formerly member of the Board of Administration in the Punjab, then Chief Commissioner of Oude, and then Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab, stated that after the conquest of the Punjab a settlement of the land revenues on the plan pursued in the North-Western Provinces was begun in 1850, and it took eight or nine years to complete it for the whole of the Punjab. The Government took their share of the net profits after all deductions. In the first instance it took two-thirds of the estimated rent. The rent was taken as it would let for if let to a tenant. An officer also adjusted the other taxes on property, and all questions of shares in the land, and everything that could be thought of for the future management of the village. As a rule they were coparcenary villages. Each shareholder cultivated a portion himself, and the rest was cultivated for the common stock. If that was sufficient to pay the revenue it went for that purpose, and any deficiency was made up out of the shares. Many cultivators of land were mere tenants. There were 378,947 hereditary cultivators, whose rent could not be changed during the period of settlement, and upwards of a million occupying tenants. The whole area of the Punjab was about 200,000 square miles, of which 95,768 belonged to the British Government. Of these, 31,513 acres were under cultivation, and of the remainder about 25,000 acres were capable of cultivation if great irrigation works were constructed. The rest might be considered as ancient pasturage. At the end of twelve years from the time each district was finished a new settlement came on. The first settlement was for twelve years, and the second for thirty. In the second they took only one-half of the net profits. The proprietors had also to pay a cess of one per cent. for roads, and one per cent. for education. They did not object to this cess. During the thirty years the owners had the land to do with as they liked. No additional tax could be imposed. Suppose a village to consist of 1,000 acres, 500 of which was under cultivation at the time of the assessment and 500 not cultivated, if the proprietors chose to bring the second 500 acres under cultivation they would pay no more revenue. They could also cultivate the waste lands, if they could get water to them, without paying rent for them. The Government did all they could to extend cultivation. They lent money for sinking wells, and if water was got on the land (which then became fertile) a guarantee was given that there should be no tax levied on it for twenty years. One of the earliest measures of the Government after annexing the territory was to construct the Baree Doab Canal. It was 460 miles in length with its main branches, and they were now endeavouring to throw up a great deal more water, with a view of extending it still more. The land revenue from the Punjab in 1859-60 was £1,861,392 (the gross receipts), and in 1869-70, £1,195,199, so that there was an increase of £133,880 in the ten years, though under the re-settlement only one-half of the assumed net profits was taken, and there was a prospect of increase from the jagheers falling in. In the course of a few years the large wastes in the centre of the Doab would probably be brought into cultivation, either by the Government or by private individuals. The charges for collection amounted to about 10 per cent., but the revenue officers had judicial and other duties also. Sir Robert did not anticipate any increase in the charge for collection. The revenue was paid with the greatest facility; there was hardly an instance of distress, and the money was always paid to the day, showing that the amount was not oppressive. Sometimes, owing to excessive drought, the Government had been obliged to remit portions of the revenue, and had advanced large sums of money for cattle and seed, which were generally repaid in seven or eight years. In case of public works being made which increased the value of land, the assessment was not increased during the settlement. The 1 per cent. for roads and for education did not now cover the whole expense of those departments. The landowners would not be willing to pay more for the roads. In the first place, the roads cut up the land, and when troops went along requisitions were made, and though the Government were desirous to pay for the articles taken, it did not always happen that the inhabitants got the money. On the whole they would rather be without the roads. The Delhi territory had been added to the Punjab, which had much increased the land revenue. The Punjab proper produced £920,000. It was a country, generally, of peasant proprietors, as in the North-Western Provinces. He had not met in the Punjab with many groups of villages having a common partnership, as in the North-Western Provinces. Under the native Government there was no distinction between hereditary cultivators and tenants at will. That was a distinction introduced under the British Government. The prices in the Punjab had increased enormously during the last ten years, quite 30 per cent. The land revenue had increased during the same period about 10 per cent. This had not been so much from the increase of prices as from estates falling in. As prices increased the expenses of Government increased also; but, on the other hand, there had been an increase in the revenue from excise, customs, assessed taxes, and salt. The total receipts in 1859-60 were £2,937,058, and in 1869-70, £3,792,211, showing an increase of £835,000; whereas the land revenue only increased £133,000. Cultivation was making very rapid progress. The fact of the Government having given a good title, settled all disputes, and arranged everything connected with the interior of the villages, had given a great stimulus to the industry of the people. Of the agricultural produce, a great deal went down to Bombay—grain, wool, hides, and cotton. The canal was made with a great political object—to train the Sikhs to agriculture. In a few years an enormous breadth of country would be irrigated by its means. The cost of the canal was about £2,000,000. The last return was £300,000 a year, gross; but it was intended to have a great many branches which were not yet made. It did not pay yet, but it would ultimately. Up to the points which it reached there had been a great increase of cultivation, and that again had increased the land revenue. The water was paid for by a rate, and the people were so anxious to pay for the water that they very willingly paid the rate. The construction of the canal had taken many years, the Government only giving the money as it could. If it had been carried out in two or three years it would have been much more profitable; they had reason to hope that in the course of thirty years an area equal to half the area of Ireland would be brought under cultivation. The population was increasing rapidly. The Government had shown great wisdom in being so liberal in their settlements. Prices had much increased, and the wages of agricultural labourers had nearly doubled; the assessment per acre was about two shillings.

Mr. R. A. Dalyell, late officiating secretary to the Government of Madras, revenue department, was next examined with reference to the revenue system in the Madras Presidency. He said the ryotwary system was general in that Presidency, but about one-third was held under other tenures. In most districts there were some zemindary estates, and in all districts there were inams, or favourably assessed lands. Under the ryotwary system each holder of land was dealt with separately, and the new settlement was for thirty years. The revision of the assessment began about six years ago, and it would take at least twenty years more. It was carried on by Europeans with the assistance of native officers. One-half of the net profit was taken as the Government share, and was converted into money on the average price of a series of years. The Government had retained to themselves the right to all increase of assessment owing to increased cultivation. All the best land was already taken up, but each year a fresh quantity of land was taken up, and from that source they had every year a considerable increase of revenue. They considered the ryot to be the owner. He was not usually the occupier of the land. They had about two and a half millions of ryots and one million of tenants, the latter being occupiers from year to year. In assessing the revenue they took no notice of an occupier of that kind. In arriving at most of the new settlements for thirty years they took an average of prices, chiefly on the twenty years previous. There had been an enormous increase of prices during the last fifteen years. The rise commenced about 1850 or 1851. There were some very large estates; about one-third of the country was held on permanent tenure, either zemindary or inam. A commission which had just been brought to a close commuted all those sources on which the latter description of tenures were held for a small quit rent. In Madras they considered all waste land as within the limits of some village; if the occupants of the village chose to take it they might. The zemindary waste land belonged to the zemindars. In the settlement a power was reserved of making a cess for roads and other matters. A permanent settlement was ordered for Madras shortly after that of Bengal, and it proceeded to the extent of about one-third of the country before it was stopped. In a large portion of the Presidency the lands were sold by auction, in order to create an aristocratic body, but most of the men who bought those lands failed, and a great portion of the land is now managed on the ryotwary system. Protests were made by the revenue officers against that permanent settlement, but in vain. He had every reason to hope that there would be a small but steady increase in the land revenue, though the progress would be slow. In the western coast in Malabar the property was held by the estate, and not by villages.

The committee then adjourned until the Tuesday after the Easter recess, April 18.

Miscellaneous.

Death of Mr. J. Walker.—The death is announced of Mr. James Walker, chairman of the Madras Railway, deputy chairman of the Oriental Bank Corporation, and one of the directors of the Union Bank of London.

Oriental Congress.—The Oriental Congress of Great Britain and Ireland, which has been organised by the Society of Arts, proposes to hold its first meeting at Manchester, with a view to the support of the Cotton Supply Association. It is said that this association is very favourably disposed towards the Congress.

Hindoo Law.—Professor Goldstucker's paper "On some Deficiencies in the Present Administration of Hindoo Law," which was read before the East India Association on June 8, 1870, is to be issued as a separate pamphlet by the Association. It points out the absolute need of Indian judges being good Sanskritists, and of the late authoritative native law books being translated, while the translations of the earlier ones are revised.

A New Powder.—A novel explosive powder has been invented by Mr. Jos. Fenton, of Elmswell, near Bury St. Edmunds. The powder is white in colour, and, it is asserted, leaves no foulness in the gun after firing; may be made more cheaply; is of greater strength and quicker combustion than either gunpowder or guncotton; is unaffected by damp or exposure to the atmosphere; and cannot be fired by a blow. The War-office authorities are giving it an examination.

Musketry Instruction.—The returns of musketry instruction in the army for the past year have just been issued. The "figures of merit" of the infantry battalions and depots have improved in comparison with those obtained last year. Of 76 battalions, 14 obtained 125, or very good; 40, 100, or good; 21, 80, or moderate; and under 80, or bad, one. Of 64 depots, 10 were very good, 28 good, 21 moderate, and five bad. It is also stated in the General Order that "the independent firing and skirmishing practices are good."

Cotton Returns.—The Board of Trade accounts state that the imports of raw cotton into the United Kingdom in the first quarter of the year 1871 reached the large amount of 5,318,511 cwt., stated to be of the value of £18,738,015. The quantity is more than double that of the corresponding period of either of the two preceding years, but the price shows a very great decline. Above half a million cwt. came to us from India, and above half a million from Egypt; the quantity arrived from the United States was no less than 3,949,190 cwt. The export from this country of imported cotton in the three months has exceeded a million cwt.

British Indian Submarine Telegraph Company.—An interim report of the British Indian Submarine Telegraph Company (Limited) states the receipts for the six months ended March 31 to have been £41,310. The receipts in October, December, and January averaged less than £5,000 per month, owing to interruptions in the communication but the earnings in November and February, with interruptions of three and eleven days respectively, were nearly £7,500, while last month they amounted to £11,901, "proving that with an uninterrupted line and the present tariff, the prospects of the company may be considered favourable." It is proposed to pay an interim dividend in July next for the half-year just closed.

Coolie Emigration from India.—An annual Parliamentary return shows that in the year 1870, 4,026 immigrants from India were introduced into the Island of Mauritius, and 7,742 into the West Indies, the latter number comprising 4,943 brought to British Guiana, 1,893 to Trinidad, and 906 to Jamaica. From 1843 to 1870, 349,001 immigrants and liberated Africans have been introduced into Mauritius, and 225,993 into the West Indies, India furnishing 475,464 of the total number. In 1870, 2,842 returned home from Mauritius, 421 from British Guiana, with earnings amounting to £12,290, remitted for them through Government agency, and 408 from Trinidad, with £19,782 so remitted. Since 1843, 7,621 have returned home from British Guiana, and more than £128,000 of earnings were remitted through Government agency for 6,313 of them; 97,418 returned home from Mauritius, but there is no account of their earnings remitted, nor any complete account for the West India Islands.

East India Association.—A meeting of the Council of the East India Association was held last Tuesday, at their Rooms, 20, Great George-street, Mr. Eastwick, M.P., in the chair. About twenty-five new members were elected, among them Baron Sandhurst, Sir D. Wedderburn, Bart., M.P., H. B. Samuelson, Esq., M.P., Major-General Sir H. Storks, P.C., M.P., W. Markby, Esq. (late Judge of the High Court of Judicature in Bengal), Juland Danvers, Esq., Colonel Rathbone, G. G. Macpherson, Esq., T. Taylor, Esq., and Lee Smith, Esq. Lord Sandhurst was also elected a vice-president. The thanks of the council were voted to the able and energetic honorary secretary, W. Dadabhai Naoroji, who proceeds to India next Saturday on business connected with the Association. It was arranged that a deputation should wait upon the Secretary of State for India with reference to Sir J. Elphinstone's plan for connecting the Gulf of Manar with Palk's Straits; and other business of importance was transacted.

Military.—Captain H. P. Ewart proceeds out to India as aide-de-camp to his Excellency Sir William Fitzgerald, G.C.S.I., Governor of Madras.—Until the Army Regulation Bill becomes law no further, or at least, very few, appointments will be made to cornetcies and ensigncies. Some purchase vacancies may be filled, but no first commission will be sold.

Indian Grievances.—The Asiatic observes with some satisfaction in the report of the British Indian Association that subjects specified in the petition drafted by the committee appointed for the purpose, praying for the appointment of a Royal Commission of Inquiry into the administration of India, are almost all included in the question of financial administration, which is now under consideration of the Parliamentary Committee. The following are the subjects, as enumerated in the annual report—viz., first, the financial administration of the country; second, the administration of the Public Works Department; third, the system of obtaining stores from England; fourth, home charges; fifth, administration of the income-tax; sixth, the constitution of the Legislative Council; seventh, the annual exodus of the Government of India to Simla; eighth, the relation of the Viceroy with the Secretary of State; and ninth, appointment of military officers to the Staff Corps. Our contemporary thinks it would have been wise if the British Indian Association had co-operated with the East India Association in the matter.

Falmouth, Gibraltar, and Malta Telegraph Company.—An interim report of the Falmouth, Gibraltar, and Malta Telegraph Company states the traffic receipts for the six months ended the 31st of March to have been £41,237. The interruption in the Lisbon and Gibraltar section lasted seventy-five days, and the repairs cost £16,000, owing in a great measure to the unusual severity of the winter and the depth at which the fault occurred. A loss in the insulation of the same section has again appeared, owing, it is believed, to under-currents hitherto unsuspected; and although the line is conveying the traffic with regularity, the directors, to avoid the risk of another interruption, have decided to lay an alternative line from Gibraltar to the mouth of the Guadiana river, which will require about 150 miles of cable. Thence to Lisbon, about 200 miles, there is a land line belonging to the Portuguese Government, and the company have obtained a concession for a special wire. This will secure the permanent continuance of the through traffic, until further experience enables the directors to ascertain what part and how much of the present cable requires to be removed to a more secure position. The revenue for the past half-year would have been available for an interim dividend at the rate of five per cent. per annum, but this balance, together with some portion of the current receipts, will be temporarily required for the purposes indicated until the formal sanction of the shareholders shall have been obtained at the next general meeting to provide the amount by an addition to the capital.

Death of Captain G. Sinclair, of the Bengal Staff Corps.—No one who was even slightly acquainted with Captain Sinclair could receive unmoved the unexpected announcement of his death, at the early age of forty-five, in the obituary of the 24th ult. His illness—at first not at all serious—took an alarming turn about ten days before his death, and he sunk under a complication of ailments, the seeds of which had probably been sown by the climate during his service in India. He served twelve years in India, and was present with his regiment, the 63rd B.N.I., in the battle of Sobraon—one of the hardest fought and most decisive battles in our Indian annals. Afterwards, he was on service with the Kelat-i-Gilzye Regiment on the North-West Frontier. He held medals for both these services. Lord Hardinge appointed him adjutant to the 6th Regiment Bengal Irregular Cavalry. It is only six weeks since he received a telegram from India announcing the death of his elder and only surviving brother, Colonel Sinclair, and he was preparing to meet his brother's widow on her arrival at Southampton when he was himself taken ill. To so kind and sympathetic a nature as his, the shock of his brother's death and his sympathy for the widow, seemed to his intimate friends to have affected his health, even before he himself began to complain. Unselfishness and benevolence were marked features in his character, and many a charity will miss the aid of so popular and energetic a canvasser. Many will join in acknowledging—for they must have felt—the force of a remark made several years ago by a friend no longer in Edinburgh, that Captain Sinclair was, without exception, the most amiable man he had ever met.—Edinburgh Evening Courant.

A LOCAL ARMY FOR INDIA.

The Broad Arrow remarks that one of our great difficulties, if not the greatest, in the way of forming a really large national army, composed of a first line and reserves, is generally said to be the foreign-service question. It seems to be the idea that men shall serve six or seven years in the active army, and then pass into the reserve. An army enlisted on such principles is obviously quite unfit for service in India. Any regiment coming out would, of course, be composed of men with every amount of service up to six or seven years, but with no liability to serve more than, let us say, six years. If we assume that about equal numbers were at each stage of service, it is clear that a sixth of the entire regiment would have to be sent home every year. The same would apply to our other possessions. Would a way out of all our difficulties not be found by enlisting men for fifteen or twenty years for Indian service, and Indian service only? In fact, holding India by a local army, not a native army, but a local European army. It is said that such a force would deteriorate by long service in a tropical climate. Well, perhaps it would, but we must remember that our Queen's regiments, as they are still called, serve for twelve years at a stretch in the East, and if regiments are to be deteriorated, rather let it be those who never will probably have to face a European foe, than regiments which may some day be recalled in a hurry to fight Russian or Prussian troops. Service in Algeria is thought to have done the French no good. What reason is there why our other possessions should not likewise have local armies? Why should not Canada enlist a local force for herself? Their Government might enter the English market, and try what inducements they could offer to Englishmen, Scotchmen, and Irishmen to secure them. If we only had every army local, there would not be much difficulty about getting enough men to enlist. Some men have a fancy for India; and what with men enlisting for service in that country de novo, and volunteering from regiments which had served there, which might be allowed, it is probable that 40,000 or 50,000 men could be got together in a wonderfully short space of time. With a local commissariat and a local medical service—in short, a local army complete in all parts—there would be more contentment in that country than at present, with a number of men who have not made up their minds to an Indian career, and who only count the hours to their return. A man who serves willingly in any capacity is always a better servant than one who serves unwillingly.

TRANSMISSION OF INDIAN, &c., MAILS, VIA THE BRENNER PASS AND BRINDISI.

The several lines of mail communication through France being exposed, by the operations of the War, to sudden interruption, the Postmaster-General considers that it has become absolutely necessary to divert the course of the British Overland Mails, and to send them, for the present, through Belgium and Germany, and over the Brenner Pass, to Brindisi.

As the mails despatched on Friday evening will only reach Brindisi, under existing arrangements, a short time before the departure of the Packet, the Supplementary Mails hitherto despatched on Saturday morning will be discontinued.—By command of the Postmaster-General.—Central Post-office, October 19, 1870.

"This Section shall in no case be applied so as to raise the aggregate allowance of any Officer, who may return from furlough after the 23rd November, 1869, above the allowances which he would draw in the office in which he officiates if the substantive appointment which he relinquished when proceeding on furlough were restored to him."
